

TUMORS CONQUERED

SERIOUS OPERATIONS AVOIDED.

Unqualified Success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the Case of Mrs. Fannie D. Fox.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy, Tumor.

The growth of a tumor is so sly that frequently its presence is not suspected until it is far advanced.

Mrs. Fannie D. Fox

So-called "wandering pains" may come from its early stages, or the presence of danger may be made manifest by profuse monthly periods, accompanied by unusual pain, from the abdomen through the groin and thighs.

If you have mysterious pains, if there are indications of inflammation or displacement, secure a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound right away and begin its use.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., will give you her advice if you will write her about yourself. She is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"I take the liberty to congratulate you on the success I have had with your wonderful medicine. Eighteen months ago my periods stopped. Shortly after I felt so badly that I submitted to a thorough examination by a physician and was told that I had a tumor and would have to undergo an operation."

"Soon after I read one of your advertisements and decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. After taking five bottles as directed the tumor is entirely gone. I have been examined by a physician and he says I have no signs of a tumor now. It has also brought my periods around once more, and I am entirely well."—Fannie D. Fox, 7 Chestnut Street, Bradford, Pa.

An Eastern paper says a man was recently cured of rheumatism by getting 100 bees to sting him. It is a wise provision of Providence that bees can't understand English. If they had known that they were doing the man a service they would have probably flown away, refusing to sting.

Readers of history will be confused by the statement that the last British troops did not leave America until 1906. Yet such is the fact. On May 17th the Royal Engineers and the Artillery garrison marched out of their barracks, near Victoria, British Columbia, and returned to England. Hereafter Canadian troops will garrison all Canadian military stations.

Opportunities at home are so numerous that young Americans do not care to go to the Philippines, either as office holders or in a private capacity. That, we are inclined to think, is the explanation of the shortage of available men for government and business positions in Manila and elsewhere throughout the archipelago which is noted by Governor Ide. Other things being equal, the American prefers to stay at home. He rightly believes that he has the best country in the world and he will not leave it save under the stress of necessity. There will be no influx of young Americans into the Philippines so long as we have prosperity at home.

Unless strong measures are taken by the governments of the United States and Canada, the perch and whitefish of the lower lakes seem doomed nearly to extinction. The fishermen in the Detroit and St. Clair rivers and Lake St. Clair, where they have been abundant, complain that they are fast disappearing. The great demand for perch and whitefish has naturally resulted in their depletion to some extent. But the millions of carp, suckers and mudlets are their worst enemies. They devour great quantities of the roe and countless minnows. The government hatcheries are unequal to the task of keeping the lakes stocked with these two kinds of fish, chiefly because it is yearly becoming more difficult to find them during the spawning season.

With great unanimity the preachers of baccalaureates to young men graduates this year have warned them away from the pursuit of wealth. This is a wide departure from what has been dinned into American ears as "success" for three-quarters of a century. No body, unless it be President Butler of Columbia University, has hinted that this is only a new extreme quite as vicious as the old—that wealth still retains and probably always will retain its power in the world for good and ill and that the vital things for man's welfare are, first, how he acquires it; and, secondly, what uses he makes of it. With these points wholesomely guarded the rest will be plain sailing.

All the persons immediately concerned in the Thaw-White tragedy in New York appear to stand or to have stood on a plane of life where no man or woman of wholesome impulses can possibly desire to stand. The point in the whole affair with which most people will be impressed is the utter worthlessness, the immeasurably demoralizing tendencies of wealth when its use is not controlled and directed by the common sense and common decency that are characteristic of any life, rich or poor, that is worth living at all. The striking difference between the private wealth of the classic ages, imperial Rome for instance, and that of today is that while the ancient wealth was applied almost entirely to personal display and luxury the wealth of the modern is applied as a rule to some practical use, either beneficent, commercial or industrial. In this case young Thaw, allowed to grow up without the faintest sense of responsibility, without respect for authority, undertook, in the midst of a society in which very few see things as he saw them, to use his wealth after the fashion of the courser of the prodigates of old Rome. The agitator of today is constantly railing at the rich and cursing the world as worse than the ancient, in willful disregard of the truth that men like this wrecked youth are the rare exceptions in this day, while something not wholly unlike him was the rule in the dead age. All traceable in large degree to the indulgence of this man's parents, indulgence which amounted to laziness and neglect rather than any consciously had purpose, this affair lays a profoundly sinister emphasis on the prevalent parental habit of our day of abdication of authority. The most unreasonable paternal despotism and cruelty, the most tyrannical denial of the son's natural personal rights could not possibly have ended in disaster more contemptibly shameful than this. Riches enabled this young fool to gild his profligacy, but it was not riches that made him vicious and useless. He became such because he was not taught to be over. The same kind of son of a poor man, similarly allowed to grow up like a noxious weed, would become similarly vicious, except as necessity to earn a livelihood might force him more nearly into harmony with his environment. Even the planet on which we all live would go to wreck without the discipline of gravitation, and because in man there is the element of willful defiance of the need of discipline is relatively greater.

A MEDIAEVAL CHATEAU.

The magnificent structure illustrated herewith is one of the best preserved and most imposing castles of the middle ages. It stands near Compiègne, France, and is now the property of the government. The original fortress dates from the eleventh century, but the present building was begun in 1394. This chateau of Pierrefonds, as it is called, has been besieged by the English on several occasions. During the reign of Napoleon III. it was restored and is now kept in excellent repair.

Well Answered. "There is an echo up near Niagara Falls," remarked the observer of event, and things, "and when a person shouts 'Will Niagara ever dry up?' the answer comes back: 'Dry up!'"—Yonker Statesman.

Not a few of the familiar phrases which avoid the use of the word death date far back into ancient times. Cicero said "He has lived." Seneca put it: "Not lost, but gone before." A third Roman cloak for the hard fact of death was "Abijt ad plures," or "Adijt ad majores" (He has gone to the majority.) The authorship of this familiar phrase cannot be determined, but it is still in common use, often in the form "He has joined the majority."

On St. Nicholas island, near the south coast of California, explorers have unearthed the remains of prehistoric giants—seven and a half footers, many of them and with massive skull bones. Their thick-headedness may have failed to save them from the tomahawk of a Modoc surprise party. One thing only is certain: They did not succumb to atmospheric hardships. The climate is the most pleasant of the North Pacific.

Heavy rainfalls come frequently in Canton, China, and the people prayed to Joss in their temple to let up a little in the torrents. As the rain still continued, Viceroy Shim ordered that the temple should be unroofed, so that Joss would get his share of the rain. This was done, and a little later the rain ceased.

An inquisitive American traveler, who recently visited Oxford, England, asked a railroad porter why in thunder they had put the station so far from the colleges. The porter replied gravely: "I dunno, sir but I 'spected they thought it more handy to have it down here close to the railway."

AWFUL PSORIASIS 35 YEARS.

Terrible Scaly Humor in Patches All Over the Body—Skin Cracked and Bleeding—Cured by Cuticura.

"I was afflicted with psoriasis for thirty-five years. It was in patches all over my body. I used three cakes of Cuticura Soap, six boxes of Ointment, and two bottles of Resolvent. In thirty days I was completely cured, and I think permanently, as it was about five years ago. The psoriasis first made its appearance in red spots, generally forming a circle, leaving in the center a spot about the size of a silver dollar of sound flesh. In a short time the affected circle would form a heavy dry scale of white silvery appearance and would gradually drop off. To remove the entire scales by bathing or using oil to soften them the flesh would be perfectly raw, and a light discharge of bloody substance would ooze out. That scaly crust would form again in twenty-four hours. It was worse on my arms and limbs, although it was in spots all over my body, also on my scalp. If I let the scales remain too long without removing by bath or otherwise, the skin would crack and bleed. I suffered intense itching, worse at nights after getting warm in bed, or blood warm by exercise, when it would be almost unbearable. W. M. Childester, Hutchinson, Kan., April 20, 1905."

Lilith is a character of Jewish mythology, and is said to have been Adam's first wife. The University of Notre Dame, it appears, has some features that cannot be duplicated in any other school. It is one of the old, well-established colleges, with settled traditions reaching back sixty-four years, with a distinguished staff of professors and excellent library and laboratory equipment. Its discipline is of the paternal kind—strong without being oppressive; and as it embraces in its scope the grammar school, high school, and college work, its appeal is as broad as it is potent. Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the famous Indiana University, however, is the fact that it has arrived at its present marvelous development absolutely without endowment. An announcement of the courses provided at Notre Dame appears on another page.
