

W. W. SANDERS, PROP.

NEMAHA, - - NEBR.

Every summer a self-sacrificing Paris doctor puts on a top hat on one of the hottest days and goes out to test the temperature inside it. Last year he announced the following figures: In the Bois de Boulogne, on a morning when the thermometer in the ordinary shade stood at 77 Fahrenheit the temperature registered in the shade of the top hat was 89.6. At 2 p. m., on the Place de la Concorde, it was 107.4 inside the hat. From 4 to 5 in the comparative cool of the lobbies of the law courts, the doctor's head was still at 96.8. Finally, after dark, in the Luxembourg gardens, the top-hat temperature had not gone below 87.8.

A True Gentleman.

Even at Fulton street there were no seats to be had in the subway express for the crowd of weary women clerks and stenographers who entered. Two rather gaily dressed girls had seats given them; the rest stood between the rows of gentlemen, comfortable and healthy in appearance, and lost, as usual, in the news of the evening.

At Brooklyn bridge a middle-aged woman with her mother came into the car. The men remained absorbed in their papers.

"I wish I were seated," said a woman in the aisle, "that I might have the pleasure of giving your mother my place."

While she was speaking, from the line of well-groomed, prosperous-looking citizens arose a short, swarthy workman. No kid gloves protected his rough, toll-hardened hands, his woolen cap was jammed down tight on his head, and his rough jacket buttoned close about him. But his soft brown eyes shone and his ruddy face brightened into a beautiful smile as he rose with old-school manner, touching his woolen cap respectfully with his rough hand, and, yielding his seat to the old lady as if she were the one conferring the honor.—New York Globe.

Short Work of a Cold.
Materia Medica has advanced in nothing of late years so much as in the treatment of colds.

Time was when even the most dignified gentleman in the world who was suffering from this ailment had to submit to having his nose rubbed with goose grease.

Now, there is no emollient more disagreeable than goose grease, which may be the reason it was once considered so efficacious. At all events, it was in other days placed in the category of things which could not be avoided, like death and taxes.

In the course of a long life every one at some time came to the place where goose grease had to be, willy-nilly.

Time was also when the outward and visible sign of an inward sore throat was a strip of red flannel bound tightly about the aching part.

Now, the spectacle of a learned and dignified gentleman with a line of red showing above his linen was hardly diffusing and there were frequent struggles against it—but they were ever in vain.

The women of the family believed in the efficacy of red flannel. Without that flannel the sore throat might develop into diphtheria, the diphtheria would certainly develop into consumption and the consumption into a grave. It was a cough that carried him off. It was a coffin they carried him off in.

Besides goose grease and red flannel here were such remedies as rubbing with turpentine and anointing with ampor.

One could tell when a person had a cold while he was yet half a mile away and it was very disagreeable even for the most loving friends.

They do things better now. No household boasts of any goose grease or turpentine. Her condition at one time was such that she could not at night breathe through her nostrils.

La Grippe and Systemic Catarrh.
Mrs. Jennie W. Gilmore, Box 44, White Oak, Ind. Ter., writes:
"Six years ago I had la grippe, followed by systemic catarrh. The only thing I used was Peruna and Manalin, and I have been in better health the last three years than for years before."

Mrs. Jane Gift, Athens, Ohio, writes:
"Six years ago I had la grippe very bad. My husband bought me a bottle of Peruna, I was soon able to do my work."

Leaving Things Behind.
One of the happiest faculties to acquire is the ability to leave things behind, says the Philadelphia Bulletin. It matters not whether it is friends' happiness, the comfortable old routine, or the familiar environment, the day inevitably comes when the force that is in us, and that makes for progress, bids us move on and leave some things behind. If we stay in the old rut, by so much shall we lessen our experience, by so much fall to grow out into broader life.

To the man or woman who is moving on, the breaking of the old ties and the forming of new ones is needful. Sometimes the change comes about so gradually that it is almost unconscious, and the day comes when we realize with a start that we stand in a world of new associations and that much that was once necessary is no longer so. Sometimes it comes as a sudden shock cutting us off at one blow from the old things.

But either way, it should not grieve us. For we can never lose what was good of the past, and for all that we do lose we shall gain better.

Or, as a wise one has put it, "our angels go out, that other archangels may come in."

There are lots of people who can make a million-dollar brag on a ten-cent capital.

Senator Long, of Kansas, was rather effident when he went to his first big reception in Washington, at the home of Senator Elkins. Mrs. Long tried to tear him down the line and succeeded admirably. When they had shaken hands with everybody, Long mopped his face and said: "Well, my dear, I guess I got through all right, and I think I knew everybody with one exception. Tell me, who was that man at the end of the line with whom I shook hands?" "That," Mrs. Long replied, freezingly, "was the butler."
