

Major Church Howe at Atlanta

Atlanta Georgian and News, Oct. 8.

The assembling of the great Cotton Spinners' Convention in Atlanta has afforded to the government of our country, to President Roosevelt and to the state department, an opportunity to give to the south a distinct and practical evidence of the good with which the administration entertains toward the south and toward its imperial staple.

The state department has summoned to Washington the highest consular agent of the government within its reach and has deputized him to accompany the cotton spinners to the south and to represent the government in the effort to co-operate with Atlanta in the extension of hospitality and to do his full share in endeavoring to bring into closer understanding and better relations the cotton spinners and the cotton producers of the world.

Major Church Howe, the American consul general to Canada, was chosen for this very important work.

Major Howe is a man of wealth and culture. After many years connection with the railroad and industrial development in the west and for eleven years an eminently and highly satisfactory representative of the government in the consular service in Italy, in Antwerp, in Sheffield and in Canada, he has just been appointed without solicitation the consul to the great industrial city of Manchester, England.

Manchester ranks next to Liverpool as a commercial consulate and has enormous connections with the cotton industries of the world.

Major Howe is a man of large means and of ample culture and no consul in the general service enjoys more thoroughly the confidence and regard of the state department than he. He came to Atlanta with the first installment of the cotton spinners and has been from first to last a tactful, effective and delightful cooperative host to Atlanta and to Georgia in the entertainment of our representative and distinguished guests.

It is very proper that the people of Georgia and of the south should understand and appreciate the great and timely consideration which the government has shown in sending Major Howe to this assembly.

Major Howe's visit here will doubtless convey this gratifying expression of the administration's interest in our people in their most vital commercial point.

It only remains for the Georgian, after a personal acquaintance and a most instructive conversation with the consul representative of the government, to say that the state department could not have selected a more tactful and talented medium through which to express the administration's interest in our affairs, or one better calculated to co-operate with the great design of establishing the happiest and heartiest relations between the two great elements handling the cotton of the world.

In company with Prof. F. M. Gregg of Peru, president of the county Sunday school association, we drove down to St. Deroin Sunday morning and attended the district Sunday school convention. The convention was a great success. There was a good attendance in the forenoon and in the afternoon the school house was crowded. A good many from Nemaha were present.

The program was a good one, the papers and talks being interesting and to the point. One of the best features of the convention was the round table, conducted by Prof. Gregg. A fine dinner was served, tables being spread in the school house. We left feeling that the day had been profitably spent and that new ideas as to the management of the Sunday school and the best methods of teaching had been learned.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that my hogs were down with what was supposed to be a cholera, and I bought some K. C. hog cholera medicine and fed it to my hogs and have not lost a hog since.

I can cheerfully recommend said medicine to all persons having hogs.
