Mr. and Mrs. Pitto are said to be men out of less material-more bricks almost heart-broken over the marwithout straw than any other factor in riage of their daughter to Frederick

A Sr. Louis grand jury in recently weeklies have now extended from the making their report declared that "80 the city is caused by the use of intoxicating liquors."

Before the Western Press Association, lately, an Illinois editor read ment of the people. Begin the new an essay on "How to make money in a printing office." It's easily done, by turning it into a mint."

Fred. Douglas writes to newspapers in praise of his moral courage in one for the other; they owe patience one marrying a white woman. We have been of the opinion that the moral courage in that transaction was possessed by the woman.

> BROTHER JASPER, of Richmond, has been obliged to turn out of his church fourteen brethren and sisters who questioned his doctrine that the "sun do move," He is not at all disheartened, however, and says that the sun do move and will continue to move if he has to excommunicate his entire congregation,

> A LADY correspondent asks us what the "coque plumes" are that she so often sees mentioned in fashion articles. The coque, dearest, is a polygamous old bird that stalks about the lawn or a stable with proud and imperious mein, and occasionally hops onto a pile of bric-a-brae and sings a glad and triumphant song when one of his wives rings out the joyful tidings that another egg is born. He wears the plumes away back in the dim past of his body.

> THE New York World says: "A literary gentleman in this city is engaged on a book which is tolerably certain to create a stir when it appears. The author claims to have proof that Queen Victoria was secretly married to John Brown shortly after the death of the royal consort. He claims that Disraeli discovered the fact, and through threatening to disclose it secured his advancement. The collated evidence in support of this remarkable theory is all to appear in this book.

A STORY comes from Wahoo which smacks of the traditional wit universally accredited to the sons of Erin. We do not vouch for the truth of the story, but as veracity does not enter into the quality of the joke, we reproduce it. It is said that Judge Reese, the newly elected Justice of the Supreme Court, recently paid a visit to his old home. The Judge was busily engaged in receiving congratulations. from old friends and making new acquaintance, when presently an honest old Irishman was introduced, and the Judge expressed his pleasure at making the acquaintance. Pat bristled up with all the dignity that the occasion required, and with the air of a man who was confident that a crisis in his career had arrived, exclaimed: "Bo jabbers, give us ver paw; it isn't ivery day in the week that the loikes of me gits a chance to shake hands with a Supreme Being."-Topics,
