FOREIGN.

THE OUTLOOK IN EGYPT. A Cairo dispatch of the 7th says: General Graham reached this city to-day. General Stephenson, commander-in-chief, will to-morrow review the troops returning from Suakim. Major Hunter has returned to Aden, having visited Berbera, Farrars and Zella, points in the Somali territory, south of the Gulf of Aden. There has been some doubt as to the feeling of the tribes inhabiting that section, but Hunter reports them well disposed toward the Egyptian government. Although agitated over the condition of affairs in Soudan, there will be no danger of trouble, he believes, so long as a British gunboat is allowed to remain in the vicinity. There are also four French men-of-war lying in the Gulf of Aden.

None of the delegates are strongly pronounced in their preferences, however, and will doubtless be governed largely by the views of delegates from republican states.

$20,000 Gone!

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The Chronicle publishes in substance the following marvel. Captain W. F. Swasey, the oldest pioneer of the coast, makes a statement of the intense suffering of his friend Colonel D. J. Williamson, an army officer of distinction, and an ex-U. S. consul, who was attacked in the winter of 1861-2 with violent rheumatism. So great was his agony in after years, he became a helpless cripple, and after trying numberless remedies, the baths of other countries and spending a fortune of $20,000, the disease seemed to assume a more virulent type. Finally, he was persuaded to try St. Jacobs Oil, the great conqueror of pain. It worked a miracle of cure. In a letter to the Chronicle he confirms Capt. Swasey's statement and adds: "I cheerfully give my unqualified attestation to the truthfulness of the statement, because I feel perfectly certain that a knowledge of my cure by St. Jacobs Oil will prove the means of relieving hundred of sufferers."

Extent of the Czar's Estate.

London Times. One may form some idea of the extent of the possessions belonging to the Russian emperor as property immediately attached to the crown when we hear that the Altai estates alone cover an area of 40,000,000 desjatinas, or over 170,000 square miles, being about three times the size of England and Wales. The Nerchinsk estates, in eastern Siberia, are estimated at about 18,000,000 desjatinas. In the Altai estates are situated the gold and silver mines of Barnaul, Paulov, Smijov and Loktepp, the copper foundry at Sasoum and the great iron works at Gavrilov, in the Salagirov district. The receipts from these enormous estates are in a ridiculously pitiful ratio to their extent. In the year 1882 they amounted to 950,000 rubles, or a little more than $95,000; while for 1883 the revenue was estimated at less than half this sum, or about 400,000 rubles. The rents, etc., gave a surplus over expense of administration of about a million and a half of roubles. On the other hand, the working of the mines showed a deficit of over a million; hence the result just indicated. A partial explanation of this very unsatisfactory state of things is to be found in the situation of the mines, which are generally in places quite destitute of wood, while the smelting works were naturally situated in districts where wood abounds, sometimes as much as 600 or 700 kilometers distant from the mines. The cost of transport of raw materials became considerable in this way. By deposit all the wood available in the neighborhood of the smelting works became used up, and it was necessary to fetch wood from distances of even over 100 kilometers. Formerly the mines were very nearly penal settlements, worked by convicts, who were partly helped by immigrants, whose sons were exempted from military service on the condition of working in the mines. But since the abolition of serfdom this system has been quite altered, and there is now a great deal of free labor on the ordinary conditions.

Emerson and Phillips.

Boston Letter to Hartford Courant. Mild a man as Ralph Waldo Emerson was, he resented Wendell Phillips' attacks upon personal character with a feeling such as was shown by few of his contemporaries. Mr. Phillips and Mr. Emerson being both Boston boys, and in the Latin school at the same time, and also sympathizing with each other in the early days of the anti-slavery, were on rather intimate terms of intercourse through much of their lives. The placid philosopher was probably led to wonder at the vehemence of manner of Mr. Phillips on more than one occasion. Mr. Emerson never had controversies with anyone himself. He simply shunned the society of those who were not congenial. You may remember his quiet remark when he was once represented by a clergyman of the orthodox faith as the incarceration of evil because of his lack of agreement with evangelical beliefs in his theological views. "Our friend seems a very earnest man," he is reported to have said. But Mr. Emerson did break with Mr. Phillips. The latter went to Concord in one of the Butler campaigns, and uttered a violent philippic against Judge Hoar. Emerson heard it, and after the address was over, when Mr. Phillips approached him to take his hand as usual, it was declined with dignity and firmness. There was never any intercourse between the two men after that. They met not frequently, but when they were thrown into the same company Mr. Emerson declined all intercourse with one who, he said, had been so unfair and unjust in his treatment of his friend Judge Hoar. His language was still stronger than this, but perhaps it is not gracious to quote it at the present time.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE.

An Oculist's Triumph. Transplanting a Rabbit's Conjunctiva Into a Human Eye.

From the Omaha Bee.

In surgery, no less than in medical science, wonderful progress has been made in the last score of years. The knife in the hands of the skillful surgeon is made to perform for the benefit of humanity cures and changes which a quarter of a century ago would have been considered entirely beyond the power of man. This was strongly exemplified in a difficult but neatly executed case of surgery performed by Dr. Graddy, the oculist, of this city, a few days ago. The reporter had been invited to witness the transplanting of a piece of rabbit's eye to the eye of a young man. Anxious to witness an operation rare in ophthalmic surgery, he was promptly on hand. All the preparations had been made for the event. Glittering surgical instruments lay open on the secretary, and Dr. Graddy was explaining the peculiar features of the operation about to be performed to several medical gentlemen who were present as assistants.

"I am about to transplant a portion of the conjunctiva of that rabbit, in the right eye of this boy," said the doctor, in reply to a question, as he pointed to a young man some nineteen years of age. "The conjunctiva is the mucous membrane which lines the interior of the eyelids and exterior of the eyeball. The lad is nearly blind from partial blepharophthalmos or partial closure of the lids. He has been under treatment for some time and I have made good progress with his left eye by drawing new membrane into the corner and holding it in place until it became attached, but all my efforts to produce the same effect in the right eye have failed on account of the friable nature of that portion of the conjunctiva which remains. I now propose to replace it with new tissue taken from the eye of that rabbit and let it grow in place of his own."

A few moments only were necessary to etherize the patient. A pair of delicate scissors, in Dr. Graddy's skillful hand, quickly prepared the diseased eye for the reception of the new membrane by the removal of the old cicatrices or scars, which disfigured the inside of the corner of the eyelids of the unconscious patient, and left them raw and bleeding.

"Now I am ready for the rabbit," said the doctor. A cloth was quickly thrown over Bunny's head, and in a trice he was as unconscious of pain as the patient whose eyes he was to assist in restoring to health. Scissors and forceps and scalpel were now called into requisition, and the doctor began the difficult work of dissecting from around the rabbit's eye the delicate membrane which was to be transplanted to the human eye. Deftly, bit by bit, it was disengaged from the adhering tissues and held by slender curved needles, through whose eyes were drawn silken threads, which were to attach it to its new home. Five minutes of rapid work only were necessary to complete the dissection, when the conjunctiva, a thin and delicate membrane, was lifted from the rabbit by the threads and carried over to the patient, who had recovered from the effects of the ether. The eyelids were lifted and the quivering membrane carefully dropped into the corner, trimmed until it fitted precisely the abraded surface and then deftly sewn by three or four stitches to the place. The patient's eyes were then bandaged and he was dismissed with the injunction to remain quietly in bed for four days. Dr. Graddy stated that it was not a particularly rare operation, but one not frequently performed outside of the large eastern cities. The disease is sometimes congenital, but in the present case he thought must be the result of either inflammation at an early age or acute and long continued granulation of the lids. The patient's skin was naturally of a puffy character, containing a good deal of fat under it, and this increased the difficulty.

A medical gentleman who, like the reporter, was present as a spectator, remarked that the operation was splendidly performed, and the reporter fully coincided with this opinion.

THE PRIZES PROMPTLY PAID.

The Division of Fifteen Thousand Dollars Drawn in the Louisiana Lottery.

About the first of March twenty-seven workmen at the West Milwaukee shops of the St. Paul road, nearly all of whom were employed in the paint department, conceived the idea of trying their luck in the forthcoming drawing of the Louisiana State lottery. With the exception of one or two, who took two chances, the men each contributed one dollar, which was invested in tickets and a pool formed. The drawing took place at New Orleans on the 11th inst., and a few days afterwards Henry Rivers, foreman of the railway company paint shops, who had been intrusted with the matter, received advices from Mr. Dauphin, president of the Louisiana lottery, that ticket No. 14,467 had drawn the first capital prize of $75,000, one-fifth of the ticket being held by the Milwaukee pool, entitling the members to $15,000. Last week (Tuesday) the money was paid to Mr. Rivers through the Marine and Fire Insurance Company's bank. The windfall has been divided among the fortunate investors, each receiving $555 55. The men were highly elated over their unexpected good fortune, and the promptness with which the money was paid by the lottery management. Nearly every cent of the money has been invested in homesteads. A Wisconsin reporter made a search for the names of the lucky men, but several who were seen refused to talk about their lucky streak.—Milwaukee (Wis.) Evening Wisconsin, March 31st.
