THE Kenesaw-Oxford cut-off is still in the hands of John Fitzgerald, who having completed the same before the time contracted—September—demands a bonus for its use.

TEEMER, the Pennsylvania wonder, won the sculling race from Ross of St. Johns, Saturday, making the fastest time on record, and doing some phenomenal rowing. Teemer's star is assuming proportions in the aquatic world.

THE receipts of the post-office department for the year 1884, will be about $2,000,000 less than in 1883, owing to the reduction of letter-postage from three to two cents. The post-office authorities regard the showing as satisfactory.

THE proposed amendment to the Constitution of Nebraska, creating a railroad commission, which will come before the people, this fall, the Omaha Bee thinks must be defeated, and should it be as efficient as Iowa's railroad commission, the Bee is right.

THE Hastings Gazette-Journal has been reduced in size from an 8-column to a 7-column folio. It is never well to bite off more than can be masticated and digested properly. Better start lower down on the ladder, and work up, than start too high and tumble down.

THE London courts have decided that a man cannot keep in his yard dogs which bark and howl, or cocks which crow at early morn; nor can man or woman hang parrots out of the windows, or hand-organ fiends play when complaint is made against them. The attention of Omaha officials is called to this decision. We might as well have the thing unanimous.—Republican.

GEN. BUTLER announced at the Greeley reception at Portsmouth on Monday that the North Pole belonged to the United States and that somebody would get there sooner or later to hoist the American flag on its tip. Wonder if we couldn't persuade the General to take charge of an expedition, to camp out and approach it by slow degrees, as he suggests? It would be a healthy occupation. Work in the open air would renew Ben's youth.

THE Constitutional Amendment which comes up for adoption or rejection at the election, this fall, provides that the bi-ennial sessions of our Legislature shall be increased from 40 to 60 days, and increases the pay of members from $3 per day to $300 for the session, or $5 per day. That this amendment shall be adopted is devoutly to be wished for, as the present remuneration is a mere pittance. Three dollars will not pay a man's board at a first-class hotel, not to speak of "numerous incidentals"—which we will not mention. The sum now received by our representatives is entirely too insignificant.

MR. HENDRICKS does not hesitate to say that just before Mr. Lincoln was assassinated he assured him of his gratitude for his assistance in crushing out the rebellion. That is, to be explicit, Mr. Hendricks did not thank Mr. Lincoln for putting down the rebellion, but Mr. Lincoln, whom Mr. Hendricks not long before had said must be "switched out of the White House with a bundle of switches" before the country could be saved, thanked Mr. Hendricks for putting down the rebellion. There is no doubt that of all the jokes honest old Abe ever perpetrated in the whole course of his life he must have considered this his best. In fact, it is such a good one that we shall have to ask for the papers.—Journal.

THE intention of the British government to devote £150,000,000 to building railroads in India, so as to get the wheat of Hindostan to market, and the fact that that cereal can be raised by cheap labor there and brought to England at a lower rate than our farmers can afford to sell it, is another warning that the dependence of our farmers must be upon a home market. India wheat will never compete in the market of the United States with American wheat. With a proper diversification of industries, such as is sought to be established by the American system of protection to home labor, no foreign market will be necessary except in cases where the special products of this country can not be duplicated abroad. We raise too much wheat now, and the attention of the farmers should be turned, in this part of the country, to corn, hogs, cattle and sheep. Those are crops that cannot be much affected by the competition of the cheap labor of Europe or Asia.—Journal.

AN interesting point has been raised by a Fremont saloon keeper who was sued by an Omaha firm for $640, due for liquors and cigars. The defendant admitted that he owed $143 for cigars, but denied that he was indebted for the balance, which was for liquor, because, as he claims, the Omaha house had no license. The matter was taken under advisement by the court. If it should be decided by the courts that a debt for liquor can not be collected by a wholesale liquor house unless it has a license, it will settle the question as to wholesale liquor licenses, as no wholesaler would then attempt to do business without a license. This very question of the exemption of wholesale liquor dealers from the high license law is now before the supreme court, and will probably come up for final decision in a few days.

A CALIFORNIA man died fifteen years ago in a state of exhilaration from drinking the red wine of that famous state. His ghost has just returned from the great beyond and informed a friend still in the flesh that he was still drunk, that as he went into the spirit land so he was yet. Now if this is true it is a terrible revelation. If a fellow dies from starvation he must wander through realms of space for fifteen years at least with the torture of death in his stomach. If he be sped away by the kick of a mule, his somersaults will be continued like those of wonderful Tom Twist, spinning and spinning still. Should he be sent into the atmosphere by an explosion and the spirit flee while the body is ascending, the departed must go on up and up for fifteen years, until at last the bottom of a strawberry box would have a successful rival; or if the descent had begun before the vital spark were extinguished, the soul would go on falling and falling until it would be qualified to sound the depths of personal journalism. The more this thing of the beyond is opened up the less attraction there is about it. The plain duty of mankind is to live as long as possible and then depart in an orderly and pleasant way.—Topics.

ONE of the curious things about the present political canvass is the brilliancy with which it lights up the New York crime of 1882 when Charles J. Folger was so ignominiously beaten in the canvass for the Governorship. The Inter Ocean is informed that the Rev. Mr. Ball and the Rev. Mr. Mitchell both of whom are now bearing such important and earnest testimony against Mr. Cleveland's character showing its moral worthlessness were most enthusiastically for that gentleman in 1882. It is said that Dr. Ball departed so far from his usual custom as to stand at the polls and peddle Cleveland tickets on election day, while Dr. Mitchell prayed for his success against Folger. It is not the intention of this paragraph to throw doubt on the veracity of these gentlemen or discredit the stories they now tell, for we fully believe them, but to point out to the world the extremely embarrassing position the high-toned kickers are most apt to be placed in. Grover Cleveland was just as unfit a man for an honest voter's ballot in 1882 as he is now, while everybody admits that Judge Folger is one of the purest men New York has given to public life, yet these same gentlemen were then too pure to vote for Folger, and labored and voted and prayed for Cleveland. Very true it undoubtedly is that then they did not know of this special feature in Cleveland's character. Nevertheless it was known in Buffalo, and the whole history of the affair, legal documents and all, was in the office of one of the republican journals of that city, ready to be printed, but Folger's friends refused to have it done. They saw the madness of the opposition to Folger, and let it have its own way. The folly and scandal of it is now seen, and not many of the actors in it, it is safe to say, will repeat its like. If we were to draw any lesson from this it would be that ministers, college professors and men of that character are poor judges of public men and most unwise guides in public affairs. The practical things of life they lose sight of in pursuit of theories, and to rebuke friends whom they think have erred they join the cause of the common enemy. Sentiment, passion and prejudice are too apt to be the moving causes of their political action. For guides in faith and education they certainly should have the preference, but for opinions of men and public affairs we give preference to those who mingle with the world and have given such matters special study.—Inter Ocean.

THE total number of patents granted for agricultural inventions is 35,960.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS finds it mighty cold weather in his new political relations. He reminds us of the small boy in Arkansas whom a neighbor met one severe winter day riding to mill on horseback in the old fashioned way. The little fellow was very thinly clad, the wind whistled through his trousers, his lips were blue, his nose red and his teeth were chattering. The neighbor was moved to compassion and suggested, "Why don't you get down and walk and lead your horse till you get warm?" The little fellow brushed back his sobs and replied, "It's a horrid boss, an' I'll r-ride 'im ef I f-f-freeze!" George William will ride his borrowed horse if it freeze him.—Topics.

ONCE in a while a combined effort of the newspaper correspondents concentrated on one man makes or breaks him. It is not denied that they both made and broke Colfax, and that they have broken Keifer. However, it is pretty apparent from these two specimen cases, the most prominent in our political history, that the man that the newspaper correspondent makes or breaks isn't very much of a fellow. Colfax and Keifer, as they appear in perspective, do no great credit to their makers or breakers. They are small jobs.

As statesmen they rank pretty much in the same line with the great generals made by newspaper correspondents during the war. No first-class general emerged from the conflict who had been puffed into notoriety by the press "ambassadors," and no first-class general was eventually injured by the attacks of the same gentlemen. The power of the correspondent to make and break reputations is subject to well defined limitations.

THE furry over the Texas cattle fever in western Nebraska and Kansas, has subsided and there is a feeling of great relief, not only in this state, but in the whole country, that it was a false alarm. There is really nothing strange about the appearance of disease among such vast herds of cattle as are grazing on the plains. It would indeed be strange if great herds of cattle mingling together and exposed to the inclemency of the weather and changes of climate, should always remain healthy. They combat the severest winter storms without shelter and often without food, and suffer the torrid heat of summer without a wholesome or even a sufficient supply of water. And when in the perpetual struggle for existence some animal, afflicted with disease, mingles closely with the healthy, it is but natural that among the thousands that come in contact with the diseased animal some of weaklings are in condition to take the infection. Just as soon however as the proper precaution is exercised and the diseased animals are either killed or isolated, the danger of contagion is averted and the ravages of the "plague" are confined within narrow limits.—Bee.

WEDNESDAY of last week Mr. W. Kinney, of Hitchcock county, Nebraska, passed through Brush with seventy head of three-year-old mares, two young half-bred Norman studs, several harness and saddle horses and six milch cows. He was looking for a stock range where "grangers" were not too numerous. This, he said, was the cause of his leaving Nebraska. The time is rapidly approaching when horses and cattle which now run loose on the range, will have to be herded. This will bring about a change in the class of cattle now on the range; the grade will be higher.—Brush Lariat.
