

NEBRASKA.

There will be sale of Shorthorn cattle at the state fair on September 11th.

The greenback state convention will be held in Lincoln on the 9th of September.

The state fair opens at Omaha on Monday, September 5th, and lasts one week.

Alnsworth's new opera house, 40x100 feet, is nearly completed. It will accommodate 1,500 people.

Wm. Hoven, a horse dealer, hailing from Iowa, was killed by the cars near North Bend last week.

Quite a force of workmen are engaged on the capitol building at Lincoln, and the walls are up quite a distance.

The Roman Catholics will soon commence the erection of their brick church at St. Stephens. It will cost $5,000.

An eighteen months old child of W. M. Grossman, of Edgar, died from the effects of drinking concentrated lime, July 29.

Frank Dusch, an Omaha traveling salesman, is behind iron bars in that city for helping himself to the funds of his employers.

A steam ferry will soon be in operation opposite Blair, affording direct means of transit for teams crossing the Missouri either way.

Samuel Shipman fell from an elevator at Grand Island, a distance of forty feet. He is injured internally. His recovery is doubtful.

The Blair Republican says that the hog cholera has never been as destructive in Washington county as it is at the present time.

L. W. Wilder, of Adams county, who was injured on a tumbling log of a threshing machine last week, died from his injuries on the 18th.

A sneak thief entered the sleeping apartments of Miss Carrie Holton, at Lincoln, and stole from her $45, all the cash she possessed.

Miss Dora Buck, of Lincoln, has mailed papers establishing her relationship to Private Henry, and authorized the coroner to take up the remains.

A young thief at Falls City surreptitiously entered a store and stole from the money drawer $84. He was apprehended and made to disgorge.

Judge Bencke, of the Omaha police court, got a fall of twenty feet during a recent dark night, while on his way home, and was quite severely injured.

The people of Lincoln having, as a whole, refused to "clean up," the authorities now propose to do the work at the expense of the property owners.

Some inhuman wretch raided the pasture of Dr. Aekley, near Juniata, and brutally killed a cow and pig with an ax. The bodies were horribly mutilated.

Part of the walls of a three story brick building in Omaha fell the other night. In the upper story were a number of roomers, but all escaped unharmed.

Rev. Father Smith, of Greeley county, was presented with a handsome sum of money by his parishioners, to enable him to purchase a first class buggy.

Three tramps assaulted a young lady at Omaha, attempting to drag her into a dark alleyway. Her screams brought assistance and the scoundrels made their escape.

The fall camp meeting of the Adventists is from September 4th to October 28th. The meeting will be held on the fair grounds, Omaha, and Iowa will join in the meeting.

Jeese Miltstead, of Fremont, has been near death's door from a wound inflicted by a toy pistol. He is, however, getting better, and the doctor thinks he will eventually recover.

Beatrice has a father who strikes his daughter because she keeps company with the man of her choice. It is safe to say that the young people will be married in their own good time.

It is announced that S. R. Coloway, of Boston, has been appointed to succeed S. H. H. Clark as general manager of the Union Pacific. He will enter upon his duties at an early day.

A snide detective who was endeavoring to victimize the citizens of Papillion was waited upon by a committee with a rope and told to make himself scarce, which he at once proceeded to do.

The safe in the store of C. D. Ryan, at Jackson, Dakota county, was broken open by burglars, but they overlooked $175 therein, and went away without any recompense for their trouble and labor.

The Normal school board at Fremont met and made the last assessment of 33.13 per cent. All the subscription is now due. Secretary Morse has collected about $6,000 of the subscription.

The Journal says that two children of obscure paternal antecedents, were born in Fullerton this week, and adds that if these things continue somebody will be involved in a scandal one of these days.

Oil has been discovered near Stuart, Holt county. Samples have been shown, and a gentleman of experience pronounces the surface indications as very much resembling those of the famed Bradford oil district.

An effort was made by an incendiary to burn the Omaha Bee office last Sunday morning. The flames had got considerable head way when discovered, but were subdued before any serious damage was done.

The West Nebraska Mission conference of the M. E. church will be held in Kearney, beginning September 3d. Bishop Mallieau, of Boston, will preside. Dr. Mallieau is one of the most polished scholars of New England.

A steam engine weighing more than four tons broke through a bridge in Cumings county. The engine lies in the water upside down, only the wheels being exposed. The engineer fell with it about twenty feet, but is not seriously hurt.

Hogs are being swept off rapidly in Washington county by cholera. Wm. Rosenbaum has lost thirty head of old and 120 pigs. Hans Wulf has lost 57 head of pigs. Many others have suffered more or less from the fatal disease.

Frank Carper was arrested near Beatrice for stealing a cow, which he sold to a butcher, who slaughtered the animal. Carper was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs, and to make restitution in twice the value of the animal.

A man named Thompson, living three miles north of Valley, in Douglas county, while finishing the top of a chimney, by a misstep fell from over the end of the building to the ground, a distance of eighteen feet. He was rendered unconscious by the fall, and lay on the ground until a neighbor passing the building discovered him and assisted him to his home, where he lies in a critical condition. It is thought that he has three or five ribs broken.

A man named Hothingen has been put in jail at Omaha on charge of an attempt to kill his wife. He snatched a loaded pistol in her face, but fortunately the weapon failed to discharge. He will undoubtedly go over the road.

The Sioux City Journal is informed that the grading of streets along the railroad from Valentine west is soon to be let. The grading is to be finished this season, but it is not expected that any part of it will be ironed until next year.

Lon George, convicted some time ago at Omaha for theft, and given six years in the penitentiary, will be allowed a new trial. Friends of George claim that he was convicted on the testimony of a witness who swore falsely out of spite.

Disease made its appearance among the cows of two neighboring farmers, Beekman and Grimm, in Washington county. There were nine choice cows kept in a company pasture for family use. Seven of the nine are dead and each has a cow left.

A number of boys at Lincoln not only filled up in a man's melon patch, but destroyed all the best ones that were left. The owner of the melons had them arrested, and three of the party were compelled to serve a night in jail before the matter was settled.

The report comes from Jamestown, Dodge county, that George P. Davis, while sinking a well, went through three veins of coal, the first two very slight, but the last one (120 feet below the surface) a vein of considerable thickness. The find will be thoroughly investigated.

The republican district conventions have made the following nominations for congress: First district, Hon. A. J. Weaver, renominated by acclamation; Second district, Hon. James Laird, renominated on the second ballot; Third district, Hon. G. W. E. Dorsey, of Fremont, nominated on the fourth ballot.

The Schuyler Sun says that Hod Garfield and his brother Philo, who was bitten on the arm by a wolf, returned from Iowa a few days ago, where they had been to consult a madstone, as the family was greatly alarmed, apprehending that hydrophobia is about to result. A dog that was bitten at the same time showed signs of the disease since and has been killed.

The Omaha hotels are making extensive preparations for taking care of the vast crowd that is expected on the occasion of the state fair from September 5th to 12th. It is determined that all shall be well fed and given place in which to sleep and rest. Among others, the Metropolitan, corner of 12th and Douglas streets, which last year comfortably took care of more fair visitors than any other hotel in the city, expects next month to be prepared to increase its capacity over that of 1883, besides serving all who come at the regular rates.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers used to travel in their journeys to and from California. The children found two pieces of gold coins, and, delighted with their discoveries, ran to tell their father, who was shown to the spot where the children picked up the bits of money. After a diligent search the father and children were rewarded by finding an additional sum of fourteen dollars. The coins are all old, bearing dates from 1849 to 1855, two of which are old-time silver half pieces.

The Edgar Times tells the story that two little girls living about seven miles southwest of that town, near the Blue, were out playing a few days since near what is known as the "old trail" or the route over which gold seekers