One spake with quivering lip
Of a fair freighted ship,
With all his household to the deep gone down
But one had wilder woe,
For a fair face long ago
Lost in the darker depths of a great town.

There were some who mourned their youth
With a most loving truth,
For its brave hopes and memories ever green:
And one upon the west
Turned an eye that would not rest,
For far off hills, whereon its joy had been.

Some talked of vanished gold, Some of proud honors told. Some spake of friends that were their trust no And of a green grave,

Beside a foreign wave, That made him sit so lonely on the shore. But when their tales were done, There spake among them one, A stranger, seeming from all sorrow free;
"Sad losses have ye met,
But mine is heavier yet,
For a believing heart hath gone from me."

"Alas," these pilgrims said, "For the living and the dead, For fortune's cruelty, for love's sure cross, For the wrecks of the land and sea. But, however, it came to thee, Thine, stranger, is life's last and heaviest

LONGEVITY AND LABOR.

Work Preserves the Health, Idleness Weak-

Philadelphia Bulletin.

Ericsson, the veteran inventor, was eighty-one years old yesterday. He is in excellent health, and works, it is said, sixteen hours a day, thus proving an exception to the general rule that old men are incapable of great exertion. But perhaps this general rule, like many others that are received without question, is a fallacy. Perhaps all the guests had departed with heavy without question, is a fallacy. Perhaps it might be fairly asserted that busy men live longer than idle men; that work is, after all, the true elixir of life Many noteworthy instances where longevity coincides with remarkable mental activity will easily occur to the

Was not Sophocles more than ninety when, to prove that he was not in his dotage-as his heirs claimed, in order to get his money—he wrote one of his greatest tragedies? Did not Humboldt do more work at four score than many bright men at forty? Goethe, as every one knows, died with pen in hand at the age of eighty-two. Von Ranke, the foremost of living historians, has just published another volume of his Universal History; he will be eighty-nine years old next December. Carlyle and Emerson lost none of their vigor until they reached three score years and ten. And, to-day, who imagines that Oliver Wendell Holmes, already on the verge of seventy-five, is old? Longfellow did some of his best work shortly before his death, at seventy-five, and Whittier is now two years older than that. The vast energies, whose sum in many directions are known as Victor Hugo, snow no signs of decrepitude, although it is more than eighty-two years since Victor Hugo was born. Historians, it may be remarked, have usually been long-lived.

Voltaire died at 84. Thierry and Michelet at 76; Mignet and Guizot at 87. George Bancroft is now 84, and George Tichnor lived to be 80. In publie life we have had several recent examples of great men whose power for statesmanship did not dimish through age. Gladstone is nearly 75, and Palmerston was prime minister at the time of his death, two days before he had completed his eighty-first year. Benlived to be 84.

can bear, but which actually need the work. Usually, as in the case of Keats, early death is the result of chronic disease. Shelley, who is always mentioned among those whose son to believe that but for this he he was physically strong.

Raphael, Mozart, Byron, Burns and Schubert succumbed just at an age cesses. Shakespeare, Napoleon, Cæsar and Beethoven, recognized as the unrivalled giants in their respective dety. But on the other hand, Michael | yield to the elephant. It is evident, there- clown, the first hour being given to fore, that while no strict law can be established, there is a relation between longevity and labor. Work preserves the health, while idleness tends to weaken it.

Setting down the glass he resumed the conversation as if nothing had occurred, and was as usual the life and light hearts-feeling that the "Harry of the West" had fought his last presidential battle, and lost the prize forever.

A TYPICAL STUMPER.

Reminiscences of S. S. Prentiss, the Eloquent Mississippian. Chicago Saturday Herald.

Sargent S. Prentiss, of Mississippi, was undoubtedly the most elogent man who ever addressed the house of repsentatives. A carpet-bagger from Maine, he went to Mississippi poor and friendless, and not only became foremost among her sons, but acquired a national reputation. Edward Everett, after having listened to one of his impassioned bursts of eloquence in Fannell hall, turned to Daniel Webster, who sat near him, and said: "Did you ever hear anything like it?" "Never." said Webster, "except from Mr, Prentiss himself." He was indeed a remarkable orator, his intellectual endowments presenting a remarkable said of Halifax, he was a man

He had arranged a route, and one of his friends had gone ahead to make arrangements for a hall in each successive town and to advertise jamin Franklin, in the last century, the meetings there. Prentiss afterward made an ara rostrum: Soon he heard a low sound which resembled a growl, and he learned that the hyena was his nearest listener. There were large auger holes in the top of the box for the admission of air. Prentiss commenced speaking, and when he reached the blood and thunder portion of his speech, he ran his cane into the cage, and called forth a most horrible yell from the enraged animals, at the same time gestulating wildly with the other hand. "Why, fellow citizens," he would exclaim, "the very wild beasts are shocked at the political baseness and corruption of the times. Hear his yell of political shame and indignation." The effect was electric; he The Todds and Clays were always called down the house in a perfect tempest of enthusiasm. He hurled his anathemas at his foes, and enforced Ky. Henry Clay and James K. Swiss Girls.

No sooner are the girls large enough to possess the requisite physical strength than they are set to the most servile work the land affords. The child has a pannier-basket fitted to her shoulders at the earliest possible moment, and she drops it only when old age, prema-ture but merciful, robs her of power to carry it longer. I have seen sweet little girls, of 12 or 14, staggering down a mountain side, or along a rough pathway, under the weight of bundles of fagots as large as their bodies, which they no sooner dropped than they hurried back for others. I have seen girls 15 or 16 years, bare-footed and bareheaded, in the blistering rays of an August sun, breaking up the ground by swinging mattocks heavy enough to tax the strength of an able-bodied man. And I have known a young miss no older than these to be employed as a porter for carrying the baggage of travelers up and down the steepest mountain path in all the region round about. She admitted that it was sometimes very hard to take another step, but yet she must do it. And she carried such an amount of baggage! A stout-limbed guide is protected by the girls is their inability to stand up under anything more. But the burden increases with the age and strength of the burden-bearers, till, by the time girls have come to womanhood, there is no sort of menial toil in which they do not bear a hand-and quite commonly the chief hand.

People Who Do Not Eat Bread. The Gartenlaube has an article on those civilized nations a large portion of whose peasantry eat little or no bread. Baked loaves of bread are unknown in many parts of South Austria and Italy, and throughout the agricultural districts of Roumania. In the villages of the Obersteiermark, not very many miles from Vienna, bread is never seen; the staple food of the people being sterz, a kind of porridge made at breakfast with fish or curdled milk, at dinner with broth or fried lard, and with milk again for supper. This sterz is also known as heiden, and takes the place of bread, not only in the Steiermark, but in Carinthia and in many parts of the Tyrol. In the north of The polenta, however, is not allowed portioned out with a string. It is eaten cold as often as it is hot, and it is in every sense the Italian peasant's daily bread. The modern Roumanians are held by many scholars to be descended from a Roman colony, in other words to be cousins of the Italians; and, curiously enough, a variation of the polenta called mamaliga is the national dish of Rumania. The mamaliga is like the polenta in that it is made of boiled allowed to settle into a solid mass, but politics. It often happens that a clergyman will forgo the name of a child at baptism, but the case of a minister in South Carolina who purposely miscalled a child is peculiar. The child's godparents had bestowed the name "Leti-tia Adelina Angelina." The parson calmly said "Mary," and so baptized her. "I hope you will not mind the alt ration I have made. I hope it will prove useful to the child in afterlife; so many names are a mistake," exclaimed the clergyman coolly.
