WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 29, '84.
The retirement of Commissioner Dudley from the Pension Office on the 10th of November, will be hailed with eminent satisfaction by all who believe that the affairs of the Pension Office can be more satisfactorily administered. Mr. Dudley's management has brought the office three years behind in its business, although he has had an army of clerks, and the expense of running his office for a single year has amounted to $850,000. The fact that applications for pensions filed as long ago as 1882 are just beginning to be reached in their order, shows a want of system or discipline on both, which can be readily supplied by some one who has a better appreciation of his official duties. If the administration carries out its ideas of Civil Service Reform with sincerity, Major Clarke, the present Assistant Commissioner, with advanced ideas upon a proper pension system, would and should receive the appointment.

The necessity for a reorganization of the United States Supreme Court becomes more and more pressing with the advent of each recurring session. With nine judges almost constantly at work, the court is still so overrun with new cases that it has become an absolute impossibility to advance even a step upon the three years that the court has lagged behind its calendar. Sitting from October to May, these judges dispose of about three hundred cases, while the number of new cases that it will encounter at the opening of the session next month will be upwards of 400, thus throwing its work back still another year. Thrice has the Senate passed a bill looking to the relief of the court, by reducing the number of appeals and conferring increased jurisdiction upon inferior courts, but the House has each time failed to reach the bills, though the Speaker's table was loaded with petitions praying for action upon them. Under the present right of appeal, this, the highest tribunal in the land, has infinitely more of its time occupied with petty cases that involve neither principle nor property, than with those involving grave constitutional questions.

The personnel of the Supreme Court has often been remarked upon, but I have never seen a newspaper description that did the court justice. Beginning with Chief Justice Waite, whose grey hair and beard and big mouth and big nose are all that bear any resemblance to a judge, one is set to wondering how any such a looking man as that could ever get into a seat once occupied by Marshall? Miller, who sits at the right of the Chief Justice, has the bearing, the learning and all the requisites of a judge, except the appearance, which is that of a thrifty Iowa husbandman. Justice Field, the left supporter of the Chief Justice, is a handsome, bald-headed, full-bearded, gold-bowed spectacled lawyer, whose chief qualification for his appointment consisted of his being the brother of David Dudley and Cyrus W. He is a Democrat, and a hard-shelled one at that. Justice Bradley is a small man, with large capacity for somnolence on the bench. He is, however, clear-headed, and has no reason to keep awake to listen to the soporific Supreme Court arguments. Harlan is a handsome Kentuckian who is long all over as well as long-headed. He chews tobacco amazingly, but withal is an excellent judge who writes excellent opinions. Woods was little known as a soldier in Georgia, but will be less known as a judge, while Gray, of Boston, is every inch of his six feet four, a stalwart specimen of the New England jurist. Gray is an old bachelor, crispy and snappy, but he can work off more business than any two of his associates. Stanley Matthews has no business on the bench of the Supreme Court, and Blatchford, who was an admirable district court judge in New York, is not basement high in this court. DOM PEDRO.
