Our bourbon brethren, who have been out in this cold, unfriendly world, feeding on the husks of defeat for the past quarter of a century, at last have occasion for rejoicing and ratification, and due advantage of that fact was taken, Wednesday evening. Considerable preparation had been made in the way of torches, transparencies, and the like, and after the evening shades had gathered and thickened over the land, the procession was formed on the corner of Main Avenue and Dennison street, and headed by the band moved out Dennison street to Macfarland, thence returning to Main, whence they proceeded along etc., and in order to keep pace Dennison to Madison. Traversing the avenue as far north as Dakota street, the procession crossed the last named street to Main avenue, down which they marched to a large bon fire, that had been previously prepared on the prairie on the former site of the old band stand, the flames of which mounted merrily lator, Pat. ed upon having some speeches, and Mr. Colfer was the first to respond to the demand. Mr. Colfer made a short, but GALL AND INSPECT THE felicitous address, pregnant with satisfaction and thankfulness at the victory they were celebrating. At this point, in response to the prophetic vision, Judge Lucas came over from Macedonia selecting railroads as the object of his affections, this Demosthenes from Liliput-land, opened his mouth and spake -a highly encomiastic railroad speech. Our venerable friend Judge Hunter next assumed the stump and gave utterance to the sublime feelings of satisfaction and peace that now dwelt down in the innermost recesses of his soul. The Judge had been devout in his prayers for Democratic victory for lo! these many years, and the smile of satisfaction that scintillated over his countehante was a benediction to his brethren present. Finally a little bald-headed rooster from Massachusetts flapped his wings and mounted the dry goods box and in tores intensely tragic proclaimed Behold a curiosity-a real, live Yankee and a Democrat." After this prelude, Mr. Bull executed some of the most mirth-provoking antics, with an occasional audible remark, ever enjoyed on these western prairies outside of a minstrel show. The effect was that the Hull audience was convulsed. With lew remarks by Messrs. Colfer and Hunter, thanking the Republicans for their gentlemanly treatment, the crowd dispersed-for refreshments.

Roadmaster Phelan cut quite a dash, s marshal, on his broncho charger.

That bon-fire was immense, and the roductions on the anvil were large.

The jollification was orderly and good natured, but lacked the old-time bouron enthusiasm.

The transparencies were numerous and contained some strange devices, one or two, in fact, that were not creditataste, at least.

About 11 o'clock two other processions, containing probably a score each within their ranks, might have been seen wending their tortuous courses from the different tountains of enthusiasm. No music, unheralded and full to overflowing. Hic!
