Young Lady at Boarding School.

At some of the French boarding schools in Paris, the girls are fed on weak soup, two or three degrees & stronger than hot water; meat from which nearly all the nourishment is extracted by boiling; coarse veal, watery carrots and gray, sour bread. The young lady who comes home after a few terms of this sort of diet may be very learned, but is pa'e and poor looking, lacking vigor and health. Give her Brown's Iron Bitters—the best the roses into her cheeks.

Daniel O'Connell and Biddy Moriarty.

The following is printed verbatim

from "Madden's Revelations of Ireland:" When Daniel O'Connel was yet a young man his talent for vituperative language was so great that he was deemed matchless as a scold. There lived in Dublin a certain woman, Biddy Moriarty by name, who kept a huckster tonic in the world for young ladies | Moriarty by name, who kept a nuckster with impoverished blood—and bring | stall on one of the quays nearly opposite the Four Courts. She was a firstclass virago-formidable with both fist and tongue-so that her voluble impudence had become almost proverbial in the country roundabout.

Some of O'Connel's friends thought that he could defeat her with her own weapons, while others ridiculed the idea. The Kerry barrister could not stand this; so he backed himself for a match. Bets were offered, and taken, and it was decided that the matter should be settled at once. So proceeding to the huckster's stall with a few friends O'Connell commenced the attack on the old lady.

"What's the price of this walkingstick, Mrs. What's-your-name?" "Moriarty, sir, is my name, and a good one it is; and what have you to say agin it? and one-and-six-pence's the price of the stick. Troth it's chape as dirt, so it is." "One-and-sixpence for a walking- green cloth and bearing a huge wooden stick; whew! Why, you are no better cage, representing the funeral of the for what cost you two pence." "Two pence, your grandmother," re- scribed with the titles, honors and virplied Mrs. Biddy. "Do you mane to tues of the dead. Next came twenty say that's chating the people I am? Impostor, indeed!

"Ay, impostor; and it's that I call you to your teeth," rejoined O'Connell. "Come, cut your stick, you cantankerous jackanapes.

you old diagonal," cried O'Connell, calmly.

"Stop your jaw, you pug-nosed badger, or by this and that," cried Mrs. Moriarty, "I'll make you go quicker nor you came."

"Don't be in a passion, my old radius -anger will only wrinkle your beauty." "By the hokey, if you say another word of impudence, I'd tan your dirty hide, you bastely common scrub; and sorry I'd be to soil my fists upon your of either sex, however induced, promptcarcase.

"Oh, not you, indeed!" retorted

O'Connell; "why, I suppose you'll deny that you keep a hypothenuse in your house."

"It's a lie for you, you b-y robber; I never had such a thing in my house, swindling thief."

"Why, sure all your neighbors know very well that you keep not only a hypothenuse, but that you have two diameters locked up in your garret, and that you go out to walk with them every Sunday, you heartless old hëptagon.

"While I have a tongue I'll abuse you, you most inimitable periphery. Look at her, boys! there she stands-a convicted perpendicular in petticoats! There's contamination in her circumference, and she trembles with guilt down to the extremities of her corollaries. Ah! you're found out, you rectilinear-antecedent and equiangular old hag! "Tis with you the devil will fly away, you porter-swiping similitude of the bisection of a vortex!"

Overwhelmed with this torrent of language, Mrs. Moriarty was silenced. Catching up a saucepan, she was aiming at O'Connell's head when he very prudently made a timely retreat.

"You have won the wager, O'Connell, here's your bet," cried the gentleman who had proposed the contest.

Life in the Coffin.

Premature burials could, it is said, be avoided by a single test, which, if reliable, should be universally known. It is that the hard, ball-like substance of the eye cannot be felt in the body of a dead person, as the eyeballs become soft and yield to pressure the day after death, and are softer still twenty-four hours later. On this subject it is related that Prescott, the historian, always entertained a peculiar dread of being buried alive, and he had therefore often required that measures should be taken to prevent all possibility of the horrors that might follow such an occurrence. His injunctions were obeyed. A principal vein was severed, so that, if life should again be awakened, it might ebb silently away without any possible return of consciousness .- London Echo.
