FUNERAL OF LEE BAILEY

SERVICES WERE HELD IN HOUSE OF NELL BAILEY.

WOMEN WERE MOVED TO TEARS

Words of the Gospel Fall Upon Ears Unused to Bible Verses—People Seldom Seen at a Funeral, Attended Services for Man Who Was Shot.

Lee Bailey, killed in the fight Monday night, is in his grave. The funeral services were held at 3 o'clock at the house of Nell Bailey, east of the city, and burial was in Prospect Hill cemetery. In attendance at the funeral were Nell Bailey and inmates of the State Penitentiary; together with women of the First Congregational church; together with women of the First Congregational church; together with women of the First Congregational church.

There was something of the pathetic, something of the tragic in the funeral service over the remains of the man who was shot and in that house. It is but a step from one emotion to another and so it was but natural that people accustomed to laughing at life, should be cast down with tremendous gloom when confronted with tragic death. And tears that welled up in the eyes of those women showed that, for the moment, there were serious thoughts among them.

Mr. Turner made a plea for a fight against sin. He made mention of the laxity of law enforcement in Norfolk and censured the mayor and police for their part in the affair. The sermon was brief. The hymn sung by Mr. Gow and Mr. Solomon was, "Soon Will You and I Be Lying in Our Narrow Tomb."

As his text, Mr. Turner had chosen Isaiah 53:5, "But he was wounded for our transgression; he was bruised for our iniquity; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."

What Mr. Turner Said.

Our city has been filled with gloom by this tragedy. Much might be said regarding the way and lives of these men who died by each other's hand. Something might be said regarding the lax enforcement of laws in our city and its inevitable result. It would not be easy to decide the share of guilt allotted to the two men in the tragedy, and the citizens who have permitted such lax city officials through long years.

But I wish today to turn our hearts to the crucified Christ, bruised and wounded for our sins.

"But he was wounded for our transgression; he was bruised for our iniquity; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."

For it is only here we gain a just conception of sin. As we stand by the cross of Christ, we see what sin costs—what it costs man and God. It is here we learn to hate it. If my sin means a suffering God, a crucified savior, I can strive to learn to hate it. It is here by the cross of Christ we learn our own value to turn, however sinful we may be. No price seems great near the price with which we have been priced. Shall it be in vain that such a price was paid?

We need a moral revival in our city, in our country, but Christ crucified is the only doctrine which can create this moral reformation.

It is the dynamical power of God enables me to meet my daily temptations, to free them in confidence and to overcome them.

David Brainard, who hated sin intensely, says: "I find my Indians begin to put on garments of holiness and their commo. life begins to be sanctified even in a trifle when they are possessed by the doctrines of Christ."

The only power adequate to maintain a more moral city is the proclamation of the crucified one.

The gospel of God suffering for sin, reveals the holiness of God and gives the power to reform and renew our life.

But this doctrine must be proclaimed with a compassion in which it was born.

As Christians we need to pray that we may never become hard.

Our need is greatest here. We blame the mayor, the police, we think of the broken law and of the power and judgment.

How often do the Christian people of our city feel as John Wesley felt when he preached in the wickedest city he had ever seen, Newcastle-on-Tyne, such blasphemy, such cursing, such swearing, even from the mouths of little children.

But when he preached to them, he chose this tender text: "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquity."

And when he had done, the people just clung to his hands and clothes. He had brought them to the Master and to the cross.

If we are to gain this spirit of compassion we must live near the cross ourselves. We shall then be able to speak the every word to win them. We shall enforce the law because we love men and because we know the inevitable tragedy whenever the law of righteousness is not enforced.

WANTS KNOWLEDGE OF CRIMES

County Attorney Koenigstein Asks Citizens to File Complaints.

HE SPURNED WOMAN ANGRILY

Believing That the Woman Whom He Went to Meet, Was Single, Philip Becker of Randolph Found a Bill for the Divorce She Was Getting.

Sioux City, Ia., Sept. 13.—Coming to Sioux City to be married to "Miss" Sophy Story of Correctionville, who answered his advertisement for a wife, and who met him at the station as he alighted from the train, Philip Becker, a well-to-do farmer of Randolph, Neb., after taking in the sights at the later-state fair, left for his home today, wifeless and unhappy, his confidence in womankind sadly jarred.

Through the medium of letters, Becker gave the Correctionville woman a description of himself and how he would be dressed, and when the train pulled into the station yesterday morning she easily picked him out from among the throng of fair visitors. They had agreed to meet here and be married and then take in the fair before returning to their home at Randolph.

After a few minutes conversation at the station, however, between the two matrimonially inclined people, the deal was declared off by the Randolph farmer. The woman, in arranging the details for the wedding, handed the farmer a bill for $35, stating that it must be paid before the marriage took place. His investigation revealed that the money was to pay for her divorce from her husband, which is now before the courts, and that instead of a single woman, he was courting a married woman, whom, he claims, was using him as a means to free herself from undesirable matrimonial ties.

Although in all of her letters she signed herself as a single woman, the cruel truth that she was a married woman fairly staggered him, and taking the little daughter who accompanied him he left the woman at the station and went to the fair grounds to drown his grief in the excitement of the fair attractions and pink lemonade.

Thought She Was Single.

"That woman led me to believe that she was single," he declared. "When I arrived here, however, she wanted me to pay for a divorce she is getting from her husband."

"I'm an honest man," he continued, "and don't want to break up any married couples, and furthermore I would not be a party to the smashing of any matrimonial ties."

When he told the woman to be gone, a scene took place at the station, and a crowd of men and women gathered around the couple while they were settling their differences. Taking his little girl by the hand he pushed his way through the crowd and was soon lost to sight, leaving the woman who was to be his bride alone with his disappointment and wrath.

He is Still Game.

Dismayed by the failure of his first attempt to secure a wife, Becker still says that he is in search of one, and that he has $1,000 in cash to support the woman who takes his name.

"I do not want any of your city women," he said. "A middle-aged woman, who will make a good mother for my children, and who was reared on a farm, is the kind of a woman I am looking for. I have $1000 in cash, and as soon as I find a wife I will buy a farm and live on it with her."

Mr. Becker said that he has five children, and that he prefers a German woman, one that has had experience on the farm.

HEARST FOR GOVERNOR

INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE NOMINATES STRAIGHT TICKET.

PUBLISHER STIRS 'EM UP

Delegates to State Convention Cheer for Thirty-Three Minutes When Leader Appears on Platform to Make Brief Speech of Acceptance.

New York, Sept. 13.—In a harmonious and enthusiastic final session of the Carnegie hall the state convention of the Independence League put into the field a straight ticket of state officers to be voted for at the coming election. The delegates cheered for thirty-three minutes when Mr. Hearst appeared on the platform to make a brief speech of acceptance. His address aroused much enthusiasm.

The convention drafted a reply to William J. Conners and other Democrats, who had written suggesting possible fusion with the Democrats and suggesting that no nominations be made by the Independents at this time. The reply expressed thanks for the interest of the Democrats and sympathy for the rank and file in their honest endeavor to wrest the Buffalo convention from the control of the bosses, but said the Independence League could not postpone the business it had been assembled to carry out.

The straight ticket was named without equivocation. The committee on resolutions had been entrusted with the task of hearing the claims of various candidates and naming a ticket. Its report was unanimous.

The ticket is as follows: Governor, William Randolph Hearst; lieutenant governor, Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler; secretary of state, John S. Whalen; state treasurer, George A. Fuller; comptroller, Dr. C. H. W. Auel; state engineer, Frank L. Gettman; attorney general, John Ford.

BRYAN AT LOUISVILLE

Not Trying to Force Government Ownership of Railroads on the People.

Louisville, Sept. 13.—Entering the southland for the first time in two years, William J. Bryan received a welcome that in warmth and spontaneity has not been surpassed by any of the greetings given him since his return from his tour of the world. His arrival in the city provoked a great outburst of acclamations from thousands on the streets. His reception at the armory, where he addressed a crowd of 12,000 people, was nothing less than a volcanic eruption of enthusiasm. Although the attendance of southern notables was smaller than at first expected, on account of Mr. Bryan's recent acceptance of numerous invitations from other southern cities, still the mass meeting at the armory was a representative southern gathering, graced by the Kentucky leaders of Democracy, a number of prominent Democrats from other southern states and a great mass of citizens from Kentucky and Indiana.

Mr. Bryan was welcomed to Kentucky by his willom opponent, Henry Watterson, who presided over the meeting. The other speakers preceding Mr. Bryan were Senator Carmack of Tennessee, representing the south, and Senator W. J. Stone of Missouri, who introduced the guest of honor.

Mr. Bryan read a lengthy statement elaborating his position as to government ownership of railroads, but declared that "the making of platforms rests with the voters of the whole party, and I never have and never will attempt to force my opinions, or those of any few men, on the people."

VICTORY FOR OHIO SENATORS

Republicans Commend Their Work and Also Approve President's Policy.

Dayton, O., Sept. 13.—The Republicans of Ohio held one of the hottest conventions in the history of the party in this state. And still more remarkable was it for the fact that the contest was not over the naming of candidates for the state offices, for which the convention had been called, but over the selection of a chairman of the state executive committee, involving the state leadership of United States Senator Dick. The senator won out not only on that proposition but also on the question of indorsement of his work and that of Senator Foraker in the United States senate, many of the Republicans having taken the position that in view of the fact that the senators had not entirely agreed with the policy of President Roosevelt on national legislation it would be inconsistent to give an indorsement of equal force to both the president and the two senators. In winning a victory over Congressman Burton and Harry M. Daugherty on these two questions Senator Dick retained his chairmanship and prestige but on the other hand the platform in which appeared the merchant marine and some other planks indicated that Mr. Burton had not been idle in other directions. On two points, primary voting for United States senators and tariff revision, one of the delegates introduced as a minority report two planks apparently with the approval of Mr. Burton, and the convention defeated both.

They had established a station on the River Ozernaya, when the Russians discovered their presence on the peninsula. Gathering a large force they made an assault on the Japanese, who succeeded in making their escape in one of the schooners. They were unable to get one schooner away in time and it fell into the hands of the Russians.
