Says the Road is a Sure Thing.

Yankton Press and Dakotan: Brief mention was made yesterday of the arrival in Yankton of W. W. Graham, of Norfolk, O., a fact that adds not a little to the interest centering more and more day by day, in the Yankton-Norfolk railroad and the Missouri river bridge.

Mr. Graham was interviewed today at the office of the Dakota Construction Co. and was discovered in the act of brushing off an ancient looking box. After introductions by Engineer Yulle, which proved to be a renewal of old acquaintance after all, Mr. Graham said he had just obtained from French & Orvis a box of papers left many years ago with that firm, and which went through the Union block fire quite safely.

The box contained papers of value to the project which brings Mr. Graham once more to Yankton.

In a half hour chat Mr. Graham talked entertainingly of the old days, asked after J. T. M. Pierce and Harry Eller, said he had called on Will Dewey in New York and got some papers from him. He was surprised to hear of Contractor Norton's death, the news not having reached him. He first of all asked about the Yankton attitude towards the long talked of road, and when informed that there were a number of Doubting Thomases around he smiled and said he blamed

Yankton people not at all for being skeptical about the road, which had been coming along now for so many years.

Continuing Mr. Graham said now came with a very bright and cheerful message, that in a chat with Mr. Dickinson of Chicago, just before he started west, that prominent man, who represents the fiscal end of the deal, said to him: "Mr. Graham, you can say that I no longer entertain any doubt as to the building of our road. It is a go this time and the project is as sure as that we are here talking about it."

This from Mr. Graham, who has for many years, since 1891 in fact, been well known to Yankton business men, means something; it means a good deal more than the arrival of Messrs. Yulle and Johnson, who were unknown to our people and who were welcomed but did not at first establish the confidence they have since been able to do by making good in many ways.

Mr. Graham said that ten years ago he had his deal completed as he thought, was told by a New Yorker he could have the money to build the road as fast as he wanted it. That was late one evening and the moneyed man then went home, partook of lobster and milk and was dead before morning. That little luncheon cost Yankton its southern outlet for a decade. Now the matter is right in the foreground again, has been financed and unless death again intervenes he says is a go, sure.

The first thing to be done is to put the old right of way business in shape, something that has got somewhat tangled up in the years that have elapsed since Mr. Pierce and his agents cleaned this part of the deal up. Some deeds were recorded and some appear not to have been, and all this will take time. Then another urgent matter is the building of a track to the bridge-site and this will also receive Mr. Graham's immediate attention.

Mr. Graham says he will be here a good deal from now on, and as he is much esteemed in Yankton, and in addition brings such good news, he will be most cordially greeted by old and new friends to Yankton business circles.

A short interview with the suspected person caused him to refund the currency he had retained. No arrest has as yet been made.
