THE SMARTER SET IN "THE CHILDREN OF THE SUN"

After several months of anxious expectancy, Omaha has had the opportunity of seeing the Smarter Set in its new musical comedy, "The Children of the Sun." Wherever the company has shown, there has been an enthusiastic reception and a unanimity of opinion to the effect that it is the best show ever produced by a colored company. The music, the dancing, comedy and singing were set to a riot of beautiful scenery such as has never been seen in a race play before. To attempt to congratulate personally the performers would be incomplete without the mention of every member of the company, because each one measured completely up to his or her part and performed it with a zest and perfection that was pleasing and happy.

As all of our readers know, the play was taken from the book, "The Children of the Sun," written by George Wells Parker of this city. Not only was the name borrowed, but the message was worked out with an abandon of music, laughter and song that brought it straight to the heart and mind of every person who witnessed the play. The first act provides the theme—the search for the original home of the black races—"The Children of the Sun." Upon the advice of a Japanese student, the party goes first to Japan. Abraham Washington's spectacular entrance into the scene, having fallen from the airship, brought a scream of laughter from the audience and it was continued as he pursued his course in making the acquaintance of Cherry Blossom, the Japanese maid. The latter part was taken by Miss Carrie King and she proved herself a delightful little character whose singing and dancing captivated the house.

The Shinto priest believes that Abraham is a god, but when he learns that he is not a god, but a seeker of the gods, he informs him that the prehistoric black men of Japan came from India. The delegation then starts for India and no more delightful a conception could have been worked out. Fakirs, snake charmers, harem dancers, and beggars meet the travelers, and show them a riotous time. But India proves only one step in the journey and they are pointed toward Susa, the ancient capital of Persia.

The Persia scene was artistically beautiful and historically great. Susa was called the city of lilies and the grove blossomed with lilies, while in the background was the city of classic beauty. The sacred dance to the sun was here performed and it was a thing of culture, delight and sweetness. It was here that the bandits captured the delegates and would have made life miserable for them had not the chief discovered Abraham's talsman which linked him as a brother.

Then came the Egyptian scene which showed the statue of Memnon in the foreground and the sphinx, pyramids and long stretching desert in the background. Abraham and his brother, Gabe, reach the monument and are almost dying from thirst. Gabe leaves Abe at the foot of the statue and goes to seek water. When he leaves Abe sings, "What the Use?" a humorous song, tinged with comic sadness and filled with droll philosophy. As he closes he takes out his talsman and tells it that if it was ever good for anything to prove it then. The thunders roll, the lightnings flash and the statues speak. An unseen hand passes out food and drink and after Abe is refreshed and the party comes up, they are told to go to Ethiopia, which is the real home of the "Children of the Sun." As they depart, the Spirit of the Nile and her dancing maids enter and perform a classic Egyptian dance. Miss Grace Howell, as the goddess, is a wonderful dancer and her strict adherence to the hieratic code of dancing marks her as a true interpreter of the spirit of Old Egypt.

The final scene is the throne of Empress Zaudita of Ethiopia. It is a marvelously worked out conception and truly in keeping with the ancient glory and magnificence of the ancient empire. Here the empress receives the pilgrims, tells them of the story of "The Children of the Sun," and makes them members of her court.

In "The Children of the Sun" a new pace is set for colored shows and a new standard of appreciation for the public. While the humor of Abe was rich and screamingly funny, it assumed a philosophy at times that was pleasing and deeply significant. Gabe, the foil for the witty ignorance of Abe, was a happily conceived character. There was so much good in the play and so much art in the players, that it would require a volume to pay a proper tribute to each and to spell out the lesson that lay beneath the tinsel and fun.

In conclusion it is worth while to mention that Mr. James J. Vaughn, musical director, wrote out the music for the entire show and developed a wealth of ancient melody and harmony. Since there is practically no history or science of ancient music, Mr. Vaughn composed everything from imagination and all agree that his imagination has served him remarkably well.

THE KAFFIR CHEMICAL LABORATORIES MOVING INTO LARGER QUARTERS.

The Kaffir Chemical Laboratories, incorporated, manufacturers of pharmaceuticals, drugs, medicines and toilet preparations, which worked quietly for several months incorporating and lining up its workers and resources, has been negotiating for a suitable building for a permanent home, sufficiently large to meet the demands of its business and conveniently located to truckage and the business center. These negotiations have resulted in securing a desirable location on North Sixteenth near Cuming street. The laboratories are moving into the Warden hotel property, 815-19 North Sixteenth street. This is a three-story modern brick building, 60x80, with three store fronts. The entire third floor is being remodeled and will be used as the laboratory. The first floor will be a display and city sales room and executive offices. The second floor will be remodeled and rented as offices to the business and professional men of the city needing such accommodations. This building will be known as the Kaffir Block.

As soon as the moving is completed and the firm is settled notice of the official opening will be given and inspection of the plant invited. This will be towards the latter part of the month.

OLD FOLKS HOME.

The meeting held at the Old Folks Home by Rev. Thomas Taggart was a spiritual uplift to all who attended, and especially the inmates. A free-will offering was asked for by Mr. Taggart. Eleven dollars and twenty-five cents was raised. Mesdames R. K. Lawne and Martha Smith thanked Rev. Mr. Taggart and congregation on behalf of the association.

We hope the ministers of the various churches will hold meetings at the home each Sunday.

We also wish to thank Rev. Mr. Wilkinson and his congregation for the collection they took up for the home in February, amounting to $25.50. Also Rev. W. F. Botts and congregation for the collection in February amounting to $10.00.

An interesting board meeting was held at the residence of Mrs. Botts last Wednesday. The next meeting will be held at the home March 31. The president wants the old and new members to be present as there will be business of importance.

INDIANS WANT $5,500,000 DUE ON OLD LAND TREATY

Washington, March 17.—Search of the attic of the White house executive offices for records which may enable his tribe to collect $5,500,000 from the government has begun by Chief Grindstone of the Pitt River Indian tribe of California. The chief, who has retained legal assistance in his efforts, said the money was due under treaties negotiated in 1851 by which the Indians gave up valuable lands, but failed to receive the stipulated compensations, as the treaties were never ratified. Now they want the old documents as evidence in a suit against the government.

NILE QUEEN

Kashmir Chemical Co. Springfield, Ill.
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen Nile Queen preparations have done wonders for my hair and skin. I tried nearly every thing to clear my complexion of pimples, liver spots and blackheads without success, until I found Kashmir Nile Queen. Now my skin is as smooth and lovely as can be and my hair has grown so long and glossy my friends all admire it. I wish all our women would try Nile Queen.

Very truly yours
