ARTICLE XIV. CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Citizenship Rights Not to Be Abridged.

1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

FACING THE FUTURE

Just now hundreds of young people are leaving high schools, colleges and universities to enter upon careers and vocations in the busy marts of life. Some will have no opportunity to go further than through high school, and this made possible only through the self-denial and sacrifices of their parents. Others will have had the advantage of college and university training and this, too, through the self-denial of loving parents, supplemented in many cases by the labors and struggles and sacrifices of the pupils themselves who, ambitious for the mental training possible to equip themselves more fully for taking their place in the ranks of service, are willing to pay the price. Education is simply foundation laying in the important work of character building. If the foundation be well and truly laid a strong, useful, helpful character will be built thereon. So whether students shall be privileged to enter the field of higher learning, or begin to take their place in the ranks of the workers, the mental training which they have received will form a solid foundation upon which they can build. To the young people, facing the future, and may God bless every one of them and keep them from the snares and the pitfalls by which youth, perhaps more than that of maturer years is surrounded, we would urge go forth to your work with high ideals and the determination to do your level best in whatever field of activity you may be called to serve. The hope of the nation confronted with grave problems lies in the youth of today. Face the future hopefully, thoughtfully, prayerfully, with the determination to do your best. This is the message we all need today but especially the youth of the land, our youth, upon whom our hopes are set.

"THAT AMERICA MAY FIND HER SOUL"

A Unitarian minister speaking in Lincoln a few days ago stated that we should pray that "America may find her soul". This states a significant truth that we all need to lay to heart and not only lay to heart, but act upon it. America was, in our judgment, called into being for a high and holy purpose, the development among the nations of the earth of a true democracy, which means fraternity, or brotherhood, equality of opportunity for growth and expansion of all that is highest and best in humanity and justice for all. This involves the fullest development of our own national life and the broadest sympathy with and helpfulness towards all other nations of the world. Domestic strife founded upon racial and religious prejudice, threatens our national being and blights and dwarfs our soul. National selfishness would place upon us the suicidal belief that we are sufficient unto ourselves. This is all wrong. America is in grave danger of losing her soul. That Unitarian minister is right. We need to pray, "that America may find her soul". Finding that the evils which now threaten us will vanish.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION

It is high time to think of the political situation, local and state. The primaries, by which the electorate shall make its voice heard concerning the character of those whom they desire to fill important public offices, are only a little more than a month distant. We should give careful thought to this matter. Nebraska is to elect national, state, county and city officials. It is of prime importance to all citizens that men of probity, character and ability should be chosen. The Monitor will try to guide, as far as we can and to the best of our ability, Nebraska voters of our group in making a wise choice. We hope that we will be able to so advise and centralize our people in Omaha, whose voting strength is above $,000 that we can make it really count. This vote efficiently organized and intelligently used can wield an enormous influence. It is to be

HOOP AND CANDLE

By BERTHA F. SEYMOUR

When "Willie" Chalmers opened the door to "Billy" Chase's timid ring, Billy's frown darkened his eyes, which would not perceive Willie's smile of real welcome. The hand which opened the door was ornamented with a silver thimble, and from the left dangled a sofa pillow top, on hoops, the same which had taken so much of her attention on the occasion of his last call. Her smile, now mischievous, broadened, and he helplessly returned it.

"Why so cross? You didn't have to come if you felt like that about it." She took his hat and led him into the parlor.

"If you liked to have me come a hundredth part as much as I like to come, you wouldn't meet me with that old fancywork, or (hopefully) you'd put it up as soon as I got here."

"Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do," quoted Willie. "Think how much prettier to look at than a gray stocking, for instance. Mamma says she always had her knitting work in her hands when she was out to her neighbors or when the other boys and girls were at her house. I come naturally by my industry."

"Yes, and wickedness," groaned Billy. "But I have prayed. Lord, keep me from being conceited, like that insufferable Maynard Mann, for in—"

He stopped and glared less at the thought of Maynard than his own guardlessness. "Did you read a book the whole evening the last time he called?"

"Why, yes," said Willie, in feigned innocence. "I told him I was engaged for the evening when he telephoned he wanted to call. It was not true, but I didn't want him to call. I'm sick of him; he brags so. He strolled by, found I wasn't entertaining, 'happened in,' and found me engaged with a book. But not the whole evening. Mamma came in to inquire for Maynard's mother, and she was horrified. She said, 'Willhelmina, if your book is so absorbing, hadn't you better take it to your room? I said 'Yes' in a faraway tone and actually stumbled over a hassock, on my way to the hall to carry out the absorption idea. Nobody but my brother would have been mean enough to tell you or—"

"I like the candle in the window," he drew near, but more quickly withdrew as the needle, reversed, came in to dangerous proximity. "Please put back my arms around you."

"You'd better, and succeed. But you just imagine this is a stocking and I'm armed with four knitting needles, not so sharp, but dangerous to the eyes."

"I'd pull them out," savagely. "Which would be very ungentlemanly. I'd get a book and get sent to my room for being unadvisable."

"He groaned. Then, "I'm remembering my candle, anyway. That brother of yours, than whom no other mortal is so mean, told me no one else is accorded that favor. I love your brother."

At last the embroidery was dropped unheeded, and only great seriousness was visible in her eyes. "Please," he pleaded, "please."

"Mr. Chase." At that he sat bolt upright, white to the lips. "I'm not going to send you away." In quick sympathy, "yet. But I've seen so many mistakes. I mean to be sure. The man who marries me will have to prove himself the only sort I would love."

"How?" he breathed, eagerly, leaning forward.

"I shall not tell you. He must really be that sort, not pretend to be, as he might if he knew what I liked in anybody."

He sighed. "Have I ever offended you?" he questioned, half fearfully.

"Not seriously." She smiled and blushed both, and both in spite of herself. "That torment has just come in." She clenched her fists, but he, unprevented by the embroidery needle, covered them both with his hands.

"Don't worry," she said grimly, "I have come off second best too many times."

"There goes the up car, and you won't tell me how to win you, I must go. Good-night."

As he hurried into the street from the house walk, he noticed a woman's figure, weary and burdened with a heavy child on one arm and a large, unwieldy bundle on the other. The next instant he had seized both the bundle and the protesting baby, and was hurrying the woman toward the little waiting room a quarter of a mile distant, feeling that the delay would be just sufficient to make him lose his car.

He was right. The next hour he spent in the little station.

At last the next car came. But he would miss his light in the window. Of that he was sure. But he could not forbear a glance in that direction, as the car reached the gap between houses, through which he could see Willie's parlor window. And framed by the lace draperies he saw two candles and, joining them, a wooden hoop.

How it happened. Her friend—What! You rejected Jack Gayboy? I thought, dear—

Miss Thirtyodd—He's the meanest man on earth. He proposed last night, and when I blushed and stammered that it was so sudden, the wretch burst into a roar of laughter, and I was obliged to haughtily reject his proposal to save my self-respect.

Mohawk Indian Woman Has Given Birth to Eight Sets of Twins.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Chief Probation Officer Henry Scull has before him a case of an Indian woman who has been a mother of 28 children. She is forty-two years old. He refuses to make public her name. Her husband is earning $15 a week.

"Mrs. Doe" is a descendant of the Mohawk Indians. When she was fifteen, according to the custom of her tribe, her husband was selected for her. He was her cousin, Deerfoot. She did not quite fancy Deerfoot for a life partner and fled camp, later marrying again.

As years passed "Mrs. Doe" became the mother of six sets of twins. Subsequently she had seven more children. A wealthy aunt in Philadelphia is said to have been the intermediary whereby the children were taken to the tribe as they attained their tenth day of existence. The little ones were taken to Canada and reared by the Mohawks.

"Mrs. Doe" later on married a widower with four children. Two sets of twins and another child were born. Several of her children have died.

Sugar Gives Off Sparks.

A queer phenomenon has recently come to the notice of Washington scientists. Disks of loaf sugar mounted on a rapidly rotating lathe while a hammer beat lightly against them were seen to give off a continuous light that has not been satisfactorily explained.
