The DOOM TRAIL by ARTHUR D. HOWDEN SMITH AUTHOR OF PORTO BELLO GOLD ETC. WNU SERVICE COPYRIGHT BY BRENTANO'S

A light burst upon my addled wits. "Why, of course!" I cried. "He was steward under my father, and in his father's time before him! But you?" "Peter was my husband," she said simply. "Robert here is our grand son. When Peter died your father offered his place to Robert. Robert would have none of it. He had the wandering bee in his bonnet. He was young, and he must see the world."

"I wish it might have," I said bitterly, thinking of Charles' lonely grave on a mist-draped hillside in the Scotch highlands. "Many a gentleman would have taken in bad part such an answer to an offer made in kindness, Master Ormerod. But not your father. No, after trying all he could by fair means to dissuade Robert from his course, he asked where his fancies drifted, and then supplied him with money for the voyage to the Western Plantations and to enable him to secure a start. 'Twas that permitted Robert to go overseas and to set himself up as a fur-trader there and afterward to return and establish his business downtown, which hath grown so that it is more than he can handle. All of it, I say, owe to you."

"All of it, granny," reaffirmed Master Juggins himself. "Y'have not made it one whit too strong for me. But I would find out before we sleep how I may be of aid to Master Ormerod." "Aid?" quoth she. "All that we have in the world is his. If he wants it; aye, the clothes off our backs. Good night to you, Master Ormerod. And remember, this house, poor though it be for your father's son, is to be your home until you have a better."

I rose and bowed my acknowledgments, but I could not speak. My heart was too full. Here in this bleak, unfriendly London, which had greeted me with suspicion and persecution, I had found friendship and assistance. It was almost too good to believe.

"I have no claim upon you, Master Juggins," I exclaimed as the door closed behind his grandmother. "Remember that. And let me not imperil for one moment two friends of my father, who revere his memory as I had not supposed any did. Save myself."

"There is no question of claim, sir. 'Tis a privilege. Do you tell me now of your present plight. Fear not to be frank with me, Master Ormerod. I do not mix in politics. I am none of your red-hot loyalists who would hang a man because he remarks that our worthy king is a Hanoverian by birth. But on the other hand I'll have naught to do with these plotters who fume over the exiled Stuarts.

"The Stuarts went, sir, because they overtaxed the forbearance of a long-suffering people. They might have returned ere this, as you know, had they possessed the good sense to appreciate what their whilom people required. But they lacked that good sense, Master Ormerod, and with all deference I say to you they will never return unless they learn that lesson very soon."

I leaned forward in my chair and interrupted him, the words bubbling from my lips.

NEGRO TRADESMEN

Washington—Taking into consideration the fact that time, training and reasonably cheap commercial loans are highly essential to the conduct of successful business enterprises, and that we, as a group, have had but a short experience in the development of such financial reservoirs as banks and insurance companies upon which our trained and progressive men can draw for the purpose of financing their business ventures and commercial expansion, it is rather encouraging to note the number of colored persons who are engaged as retail dealers in everything from agricultural implements to zithers.

The United States Census of 1920 reported 23,526 Negro retail dealers, among whom were 6,339 grocers; 3,009 butchers and meat dealers; 910 druggists; 884 proprietors of general stores; 576 who conducted candy and confectionery stores; 362 dealers in dry goods, fancy goods and notions; 141 dealers in boots and shoes; and 128 merchants who specialized in clothing and men's furnishings. There were also 34 department stores. These pioneers are paving the way for our greater participation in commercial affairs.
