THEME—Unto All Men, Acts 8:4-11:18.

Faithful Man of Prayer. Cornelius, a centurion, was a full-blooded Gentile having no connection with Judaism save that he and his soldiers were stationed among Jewish people and also that he like many other Gentiles worshiped Jehovah as the one true God. He is described as a devout man who feared God. He was also generous in alms-giving "and prayed to God always."

The important word here is "always." We can expect but meager spiritual results if we pray only occasionally or when we get in a tight place.

To such a man as Cornelius, God vouchsafed a vision. Presumably He did this first because Cornelius was the type of man who would profit by a vision, and again because of the tremendous issues involved in this vision.

The angel of God assured Cornelius that his prayers and alms had "gone up for a memorial before God."

Cornelius was not picked by chance. He had sought God for a long time; now God was to use him to a great purpose.

Cornelius was simply told to send to Joppa "and fetch one Simon, who is surnamed Peter; he lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side." Immediately Cornelius took steps to carry out the instructions.

Meanwhile Peter in Joppa had seen a vision. Going up on the housetop to pray at noontime, "he fell into a trance"—a state of suspended animation following a period of religious contemplation and rapture.

God speaks great messages only to people who are prepared to receive such messages.

to say "I'm sorry," to overlook fancied wrongs, to extend a helping hand to a brother who has strayed, to accept success and praise without losing poise. Be small enough to walk with the lowly and not feel superior. Many will agree with this, but few will follow it. Those few will carry the light of everlasting sunshine on their countenance, and man and God will walk with them.

Frat Group Asks 12 NE Schools to Drop Race Bias

HANOVER, N. H. (ANP). The Dartmouth College Interfraternity council dispatched a letter to the 12-member Northeastern Interfraternity conference last week urging the latter group to support "a real step" toward eliminating racial and religious bias in fraternal organizations. The letter specifically asked that the northeastern colleges and universities strike out restrictive clauses in college fraternity charters when the conference meets Thanksgiving day in Washington.

Members of the NIC had urged abolition of discriminatory clauses in a meeting at Amherst college last Oct. 17. The Dartmouth student body has voted 1,754 for the discarding of discriminatory clauses, 373 against, and 230 undecided. About 80 percent of the student body participated in the voting.

The Dartmouth letter went to Amherst, Massachusetts Institute of technology, Cornell, Middlebury, Rensselaer Polytechnic institute, St. Lawrence, Syracuse, Union, Worcester Polytechnic institute and the state universities of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Scarlet Sports

By Leo E. Geier

Not often do we find a good athlete achieving fame as a scholar, but this year the University of Nebraska can boast a basketball player who has attained even more than a good scholastic report. He is Dick Srb, who has been selected from students in six midwestern states to receive a Rhodes scholarship. The scholarship assures him two to three years of school at Oxford university in England.

The six-foot-three, 170-pound forward of the Husker cage team is one of the hardest workers on the Scarlet squad. He has earned two varsity letters at Nebraska and is playing his fourth year of varsity basketball. Dick, a clutch player, was the hero of several last minute victories won by last year's Big Seven conference championship team.

To me, Dick's is a real success story.

Friends who can remember him as a lad in junior high school recall that he was a thin, quiet kid who played clarinet in the Lincoln all-city boys' band. The casual observer would never have guessed that he would some day star on the Nebraska maples. His bandmaster at the time was Lyle Welch, a young man who had been a great athlete himself and was an outstanding musician.

Welch, now director of the Lincoln high school band, was a firm believer that a man did not have to be a "sissy" to be a good scholar or musician, and he stressed the point frequently. Dick seems to have approved of his teacher's convictions.

Welch recalls today that Srb was an "unobtrusive, quiet kid who was studious and liked to do things right. He was well-mannered and a good student." What he did not know at the time was that Srb would become a fine basketball player.

Even before his high school days, Dick played basketball in the city church league. At Lincoln high school he played one year or sophomore basketball and a year on the reserves before he made the varsity. He spent 13 months in the navy before entering the university.

Srb is still quiet, unobtrusive and a good student. But he is popular with his fellow athletes and students, having been a member of the Student Council and secretary of the "N" club.

Dick will begin his study at Oxford under the Rhodes scholarship in October. A history major at the University of Nebraska, Dick will study political science, economics and philosophy in England. He plans either to teach or to enter the diplomatic service after completing his course.
