Soda Fountains Oases for Man, But Where Do Animals Drink?

More Pans of Water—Fewer Cross Dogs a Good Motto for Incoming August.

While soda fountains and water faucets do a rushing business for man these hot days, dogs and horses, man's best dumb friends, look, oftentimes in vain, for a kindly proffered drink.

Birds are better treated. The majority of homes in the residence section have bird baths in their landscaped and hundreds of thoughtful bird lovers treat the feathered creatures to fresh drinks daily. This is not true in the downtown section where birds obviously suffer for lack of water.

In St. Louis recently, a $500 verdict was given a dog which had been wantonly shot in the leg. The attorney winning the case made his plea on a dog's fidelity.

It is said the beautiful German police dog, owned by Miss Verelle Head, now Mrs. Raymond Baur, died from grief after her departure for Paris following marriage.

How shall a dog drink that a bird bath is not for him? At the F. P. Kirkendall home, dogs drink up the bird bath at once, it is said.

Miss Jessie Millard has maintained a drinking trough for horses during many years, and the daily patronage there would convince anyone that the horse is not an extinct animal. Though filling her trough is "hand work," it is never a neglected task.

Horses may drink at Trinity cathedral and at Farnam and Turner boulevards.

"We state with regret that the watering trough at 18th and Capitol avenue is gone" is probably the way horses would refer to the removal of their oasis at this spot, owing to necessary street work. This trough was a pioneer public fountain, aside from those the municipality provided. Mrs. Ed Cornish, who was Mrs. Levi Carter, was the prime mover in the establishment of this drinking station which will doubtless be replaced by the city as soon as possible.

Mrs. T. R. Rutledge always keeps a pan of water in her yard for thirsty dogs. Mrs. Sarah Joslyn provides a bucket standing near a hydrant, which may be used by horse drivers for their animals.

Mrs. Ella Cotton Magee also gives a thought to dumb animals by providing water for them at her home. The Ed Creighton boys, Mrs. Fred Daugherty and Mrs. C. N. Dietz are others who give this simple relief to animals during the summer.

More pans of water, fewer cross dogs is a good motto for August.

When old white silk gloves are beyond wear cut off the good fingers and thumbs. You can wear them over handgrips on fingers or toes instead of rubber fingers.

To Visit Mr. Hull.

Mrs. Bernard Connelly of Rock Island, Ill., will arrive on Saturday to visit her uncle, Charles W. Hull. Many affairs are being planned in her honor.

At Walden Wood

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Learned will give a supper for 12 guests on Sunday evening at their summer place, Walden Wood.

Miss Byrne Wed.

The marriage of Miss Elizabeth Byrne, daughter of Mrs. Anna Byrne, to William Shattuck was solemnized Sunday morning at St. John church. Rev. Father Anderson officiating. Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Curry of Corning, Ia., attended the bride and groom. After a motor trip to the Black Hills, Mr. and Mrs. Shattuck will return to reside in Omaha.

Prettiest Mile Ladies' Golf club will hold their annual picnic Saturday, August 2, at Miller park.

"You're always handin' out epels like that."

"I've got eyes, haven't I?" his spouse retorted. "And I know something's up with you away all hours of the night, and then bringing home those fu—"

There was a sudden little sputtering sound, and I did not need eyes to know that the word had been cut in two by the age-old expedient of a hand clapped tightly over the mouth of the woman who was uttering it.

"If you ever speak that word again, I'll throttle you." The words were whispered, and if my ear had not been close to a crack in the door, I could not have heard them. I knew that Mrs. Marks was in no danger—her husband's words were far more threatening than his voice, which held but one emotion—fear.

The next sound from Mrs. Marks was a sob.

"I didn't mean nothin', Petey, you know I didn't; but I'm just scared to death about you."

"How do you know?"

"You'll be worse than that if you don't stop talkin'," her husband growled. "Now, just let me tell you something. If you and Mollie don't stop your snoopin' and stickin' your noses into things that don't concern you, you're likely to get something you ain't lookin' for. I don't want to see either of you get hurt, but you want to lay off the sneakin' around."

"Why, Petey! I ain't," his wife began virtuously, while I remembered the time when she had hidden in my kitchen while her husband and some of his comrades were closeted in the Marks apartment.

"Well, Mollie is!" her husband rejoined. "And she's runnin' some risk, believe me. Those boys ain't any Sunday school class."

"How do you know Mollie's snoopin'?" Mrs. Marks asked, and something in her voice made me prick up my ears. There was something wary, watchful in it, very unlike the ostensible hysteria of her previous tones.

Information on Furs

Many friends have asked our advice about the purchase of furs in August. We have, therefore, concluded that a general statement might be appreciated.

We do not believe the market this season warrants early purchase of furs, and therefore feel that advantage will accrue to the buyers of fur garments if bought nearer the time of use.

Your Problems

Martha Allen

Let Evil Thoughts Die.

Dear Martha Allen: If you hear something about a friend of yours that is bad and would hurt their reputation—which is right—just keep still or tell them about it? PUZZLED.

The best thing to do is to let evil thoughts die. I know some people think they owe it to their friends to tell them the unpleasant things that are said, but in my opinion it is a mistake in every case. If there is no truth in the remarks, sooner or later that will be recognized. You hurt the feelings of the victim so much, cause quarrels, hard feeling and general all-around disturbance, by peddling idle and malicious gossip, even with good motive. It is far better to turn on the person who makes the remark and stop it right there than to listen sweetly and then run back to the one about whom it is made. If more people would stand their ground when evil things are said, and rebuke the speaker, there would be less gossip going on. Many of us listen too willingly.

A Mother: You write me and say you want the address of PERRY, but you don't send me her address. Suppose, as a sign of good faith, you send me your name to keep on file in case I do receive Peggy's. Repeat your question, please, when you write.
