Style Hints

By GERTRUDE LADY DECIEN, Universal Service Staff Correspondent, Special Cable to Universal Service.

London, July 31.—The big functions of the London season, the court levees, the royal garden parties and the state balls are now over but the list of private dances does not grow less. There was a time when the Goodwood race meeting which was held this week, depleted London entirely of its social life, but even people return to the capital each evening to dine and dance. Even the king and queen will return after the Cowes regatta next week to do some entertaining at the palace, for the season has been so strenuous that there is still much hospitality to be dispensed.

Much interest has been aroused by the fact that the king and queen have spent considerable money entertaining this year. They have thirty guests garden parties alone.

American women flocked to the Goodwood races but fashions were on the serviceable side, owing to the uncertain weather. Hundreds of persons took two kinds of wraps and shoes and when they discovered what the weather was to be, changed accordingly in their automobiles.

Mrs. Sent of New York, who has been living at Cobham Hall, the lovely place in Kent of the Lord Darley family, provided a brilliant version of the prevailing "magnolia" fashion. Her black suit was relieved with zig-zag designs in white kid and her tight, little waistcoat was of white kid with black buttons.

In Lady Leontine's big party were Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt in a cherry colored morocain, trimmed in white and her daughter Grace, in a "magnolia" tailored suit. General Vanderbilt has gone to Cowes, where his schooner Atlantic will compete in the regatta.

Mrs. Harry Brown of Pittsburgh crowned her social success in London this season by having the prince of Wales at breakfast at 4 o'clock in the morning. Finding it difficult to continue to rent her house from the Duke of Norfolk for the fall she is negotiating for Grosvenor House, the Duke of Westminster's magnificent London home.

Ishbel MacDonald, the premier's eldest daughter, will come into the limelight again when she visits the king and queen at Balmoral castle late in the summer. Her father will accompany her. It is extremely rare for a minister to stay with the royal family when it has withdrawn to the Scottish fastness. The coming visit illustrates King George's desire to be gracious to labor. The premier and his daughter frequently lunch at Berkeley restaurant, one of the most select dining places in London.

Effective Bathing Suit.

For those of us who economize, and most of us must—wax and to wax, it gives us money for other things—a very pretty and serviceable bathing suit may be made from a half worn petticoat of black or dark blue satin or silk.

The process is simple, needs no machining and can be completed at one sitting.

Remove waistband, lift petticoat so as to come to the shoulders or desired neckline. Slit on each side for armholes—these may touch shoulder line. Bind armholes, bind around top to required size to slip over head, and if too low snaps may be added to either side of necklines.

Bloomers, of course, are worn, and if desired a belt of simple elastic or ribbon. This design is very flattering and suits any figure.

Satisfactory.

Dan—Will you marry me when I've saved up $5,000?

Ann—Yes, if in the meantime you don't care if I go with fellows who are not saving their money.—New York Sun.

Woman's Editorial

By FLORENCE DAVIES

These Homes of Ours.

Still we hear that women are undermining the home because of their interest in outside affairs. A certain bishop addressed a business women's club recently and gave the verdict that to that group home meant only a place to eat and sleep—a mere convenience.

Up rose Miss Adelia Pritchard, the new president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. She didn't like to contradict a guest, but she knew too many women who were working to keep up homes, not only for themselves, but for aged parents, invalid brothers or sisters, orphaned nephews and nieces.

When she had put this side of the matter simply but thoroughly the guest of the day was ready to agree that the business woman—who often carries a burden laid down by some man—is not a destroyer of the American home, but one of its supporters.

And now the news of the day asks us to look at the matter from another angle—that of the contractor and builder. "We are short between 200,000 and 1,000,000 homes in the United States, due to high cost of money, high cost of material and high cost of labor," says the National Housing association, after a look around.

Here is a realm where man rules as yet—that of finance and construction. Small prices be kept up to the highest peak, and tiny, dark-roomed apartments swallow up what is left of the home-making instinct?

"God never meant more than one family to live under one roof," Dean Henry Turner Bailey, artist and educator, told a certain women's civic club in an address on city needs. "There must be grass, a tree and a sand pile for the baby," he continued. "If you want to help, get out plans of small, tasteful houses. Have them printed and distributed to high school and junior high school boys and girls, so that they may learn early to look forward to a day when they shall have their own roof over them."

It really looks as though men and women would have to tackle the home problem together, doesn't it?

Peach Freezes.

Three cups of peaches (fresh or dried ones that have been soaked and cooked until soft), water, sugar to taste, the white of four eggs. Chop the peaches very fine, measure the liquor and add an equal quantity of cold water; add the peaches and sweeten to taste.

When the sugar is dissolved stir in the unbeaten whites of eggs, put into a freezer and turn until stiff.

The result is a delicious frozen froth.
