

Liquor Violators Ask President for Judgment

Victims of McGee Jolts to Take Cases to Coolidge—$20,000 Was Highest Fine Imposed.

Huge sheafs of legal documents, containing the walls of Omaha bootleggers and distillers who suffered under the wrath of Judge John F. (Ten-Year) McGee, are descending in a steady stream on President Coolidge, according to information received in Omaha Friday.

Five liquor law violators, now serving time in Leavenworth prison under sentences imposed by McGee, have already appealed to President Coolidge for executive clemency, it was learned Friday.

Ten others now at Leavenworth are busy preparing pleas which will be forwarded to the president soon, it was said.

Stiff Penalties.

The sentences imposed by McGee, which three terror into the hearts of Omaha liquor manufacturers and salesmen, ranged from a year and a day to four years and a $20,000 fine.

Three of the appeals sent to the president were from men given the maximum sentence of four years in prison and $20,000 fines. These are Filadelfo Capello, Tony Michiotti, and Joe Machese. The other two appeals were from Sarafino Gall, and Sam De George, sentenced to two years in prison and $10,000 fines.

In addition, Rose Ballone, sentenced to a year and a day in prison on her plea of guilty, has sent an appeal to the president declaring that she did not understand the judge's questions, and that she desired to plead not guilty. She asks that she be given a new trial by jury.

First to Pardon Attorney.

The pleas for executive clemency, according to Assistant United States District Attorney George Keyser, will go first to the pardon attorney at Washington, who will present a statement of facts to the district attorney, the presiding judge and the prohibition director before placing the matter before the president with a recommendation for his action.

Keyser declared that the chances for any of the convicted violators to obtain clemency are extremely small.

Court officials say Judge McGee has been receiving almost daily letters from the hundred or more offenders whom he sentenced to county jail terms. The writers constantly beg for a shortening of their sentences, promising to stick to the straight and narrow if they are given "just one more chance."

Fall Kills Aged Woman.

Bedford, Ia., Sept. 5.—Mrs. Mary Hobbs, 71, of Blockton, was instantly killed Thursday night when she fell from a four-foot cement wall on her way home from church. She made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Shively.

KNOX COUNTY FAIR OPENS ON TUESDAY

Bloomfield, Sept. 5.—Knox county fair opens here next Tuesday. Indications are that the exhibits in all departments will be much larger than ever before. All available space in the five big hog barns has been exhausted and many temporary pens will be built to care for the overflow.

Tuesday is Verdel-Winnetoon-Verdigre day. Verdel and Winnetoon will play ball and the Verdigré band will be the musical attraction.

Wednesday Creighton and Niobrara will play ball and the Creighton band will furnish music. This will be children's day and all school children will be admitted free.

Thursday is Bloomfield-vesting day. Bloomfield and Royal visiting on the diamond and the Bloomfield band furnishing music.

Friday will be Wausa-Randolph-Hartington day. The Wausa band will play and Randolph and Hartington will contest for honors on the diamond.

An addition has been built to the baby clinic building, which will enable the doctors and nurses to care for almost twice as many babies as were examined last year.

Three Who Pleaded Guilty Are Sentenced at Fairbury

Fairbury, Sept. 5.—Judge Raper of Pawnee City held court here in the absence of Judge Colby of Beatrice who is still weak from illness to attend to his regular duties. Judge Raper sentenced Mrs. A. E. Boyer, who pleaded guilty to a forgery, complaint, to one year in the state reformatory for women at York, Charles Heicht, a printer pleaded guilty to a statutory offense and was given 10 years in the penitentiary. Ira Mann, a farmer, pleaded guilty to arson and was given one to four years in state prison.

U. P. Agent Retires.

Beatrice, Sept. 5.—Frank Wade, Union Pacific agent at Blue Springs for more than 25 years, has resigned and moved with his family to Lincoln.

Artist Trails Wife's Trunk, Then He Sues

Guy Graybill, in Divorce Hearing, Charges Mate Friendly to Charlie Moore.

Guy Everett Graybill, a wholesale department manager at M. E. Smith & Co., and an artist and cartoonist, testified in divorce court Friday that his wife, Margaret, has treated him "mercilessly."

He said she left him July 1, 1923, and went to Dallas, Tex. He trailed her until she returned to Omaha and went, he said, to 604 South Fourteenth street, where he and Private Detectives Townley and Robinson met her. He said her trunk had been placed in the room of Charlie Moore.

Moore has figured in divorce court before. He was granted a divorce in February, 1923. Two months later he went to Missouri with Gertrude Craig Preston and was married to her. She had been divorced from George Preston and also figured in a $50,000 breach of promise action against Joseph Leopold, a grain man. She later filed suit for annulment of her marriage with Moore on the ground that he had not been divorced the required six months from his former wife. Judge Day refused this annulment and she appealed to the supreme court.

Green Forest and all over the Green Meadows. Most of the little people were not particularly interested. Mr. and Mrs. Garter Snake are such harmless people that only young Toads and young Frogs are afraid of them.

But when the news reached old Whittail the Marsh Hawk and his cousin Redtail of the Green Forest, they were very much interested. Whittail at once began to spend more time than ever flapping slowly back and forth over the Green Meadows. He flew low, and his sharp eyes were all the time peering down into the grass. Redtail also spent a great deal of time sailing back and forth over the Green Meadows and the edge of the Old Pasture. Both were watching for young Garter Snakes. Both are very fond of them. Mr. and Mrs. Blacksnake were interested. Young Garter Snakes were much to their liking. So they also visited the place where Peter Rabbit said he had seen that big family.

Fortunately for the young Garter Snakes they had scattered in all directions. They were babies without a home.

They had no use for a home. It was some time before Peter himself saw any of them again. Then one day Peter almost stepped on one of them. He was so busy swallowing an earth worm that he did not even see Peter. As soon as he had swallowed that earth worm he gazed on, looking for another. Peter followed him and saw him swallow another worm.

"Is that what you live on?" Peter asked.

"Chiefly," replied the little Garter Snake. "If I can find a toad small enough for me to swallow I have a change in my bill of fare. Little Toads are very good eating, very good indeed. I wish I had one now." "My, but you have grown!" said Peter.

"Earth worms have been plentiful and I haven't had to go hungry."

Why shouldn't I have grown?" replied the little Garter Snake.

Just then a shadow swept over them. Peter looked up. There was Whittail the Marsh Hawk. Peter sat perfectly still. He was under a little bush, and he felt sure that Whittail didn't see him. In this he was right. Whittail didn't see him. Whittail wasn't looking for a Rabbit. He darted down into the grass where that young Garter Snake had been. But the little Garter Snake wasn't there. He had known what that shadow meant, and he had glided away to safety. Whittail flapped up and away in disappointment. No sooner had he gone than the young Garter Snake appeared.

"Speaking of Toads, nice, tender, baby Toads, you don't happen to know where there are any?" said the young Garter Snake.

Peter shook his head. "No," said he. "I don't."

"I'm sorry," said the young Garter Snake.

But Peter wasn't sorry. He was glad.
