Your Problems

Martha Allen

Too Much Sister.

Dear Martha Allen: I am a frequent reader of your column and am coming to you for advice. I am 26, am in love with a man eight years older than myself. He is one of the finest men I ever met in any respect, except he does not care to dance or go to any social gathering because he says he does not care to mix up with strangers, and I love to go to public amusements. My sister, who is older than myself, does not like my lover because, she says, he is such a poor entertainer.

Now, dear Miss Allen, would you advise me to break my engagement and go with another man that my sister likes just because he is a better entertainer all around, but not as good as the man I am engaged to? My dear sister hardly ever speaks a kind word to my love—sure makes life unpleasant for me. Hoping to see my letter in The Morning Bee some time next week, and thanking you for your kind advice, I am, sincerely, yours, ANNA.

Who expects to marry this man, you or your sister? If you don't like him, you should not marry him, but you should have a better reason for breaking your engagement than that your sister does not like him.

Send a Gift.

Dear Miss Allen: I am from Missouri, but, nevertheless, I have profited by your helpful column. Now I am coming to you for advice. I was invited to a shower last week, but my mother needed me at home and I could not attend it. Now, should I send this friend a gift just the same, even though I could not attend her shower? She is a very good friend of mine. Please answer soon, as it takes some time for your paper to reach Missouri and I want to know soon. MISS MISSOURI.

Yes, dear Miss Missouri, you should have sent a gift even though you could not attend the shower. It is too late now to do it, unless you sent it without any reference to the shower, just as a token of good will.

Why Not Adopt Him?

Dear Miss Allen: I am a young lady of 22 and am considered very good looking. I am in love with a young man 13 years younger than myself. We have been going together several months, and while I am sure he cares for me he sometimes goes with other girls. How can I make him stop? NELLIE.

Of course he wants to go with girls his own age. Why don't you adopt him as a son?

Admits She Is Charming.

Dear Miss Allen: I am 19 and am very popular. Boys always seem to like me. But this is my trouble. One of my boy friends has been rather cool since we went to a movie together a few weeks ago. How can I win back his regard? G. L.

If you are as irresistible as you say you are, don't worry about this boy. He will surely return to the circle of your charms.

Use Ammonia to Clean Jewelry.

You will find ammonia very useful when cleaning jewelry. Make a solution of one-half ammonia and one-half soapy water. Allow the jewelry to remain in it for five minutes. Remove it and dry with a piece of soft chamois. THE HOUSEWIFE.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Quarrel That Promises to Part Madge and Dicky.

It was in the library that Dicky finally cornered me after everybody else had gone to bed. I would have outwitted his determination to find out whom Junior had meant when the child had referred to Mollie, if I had not realized that it was imperative to have our controversy over and settled before another day should bring the other members of the household on the stage.

I carefully had kept out of Dicky's way since dinner, and the sulkingness that had followed Junior's ill-timed reference to "Mollie" at dinner apparently had disappeared, or else for reasons of his own he was camouflaging it when he came into the library, where after dodging him all the evening I finally had entrenched myself behind a book, knowing that I could no longer postpone the inevitable.

"Well, old dear, run to earth at last!" This was Dicky's greeting. "Monseigneur Reynard has nothing on you for dodging. What have you been up to and where have you the body hidden that you're so gun shy?"

"I wasn't aware that I had been avoiding you," I said with placid mendacity.

"Oh, no!" his tone heavy with irony. "We'll concede that point. It was your subconsciousness of course. But keep your little secrets, dear heart, if you wish, and tell me what Junior has been doing while I have been gone?"

I knew that he had not given up his intention to catechize me concerning our guest, but simply was awaiting a favorable chance to take me by surprise, and it was with a sense of being on guard that I began the recital of our small son's activities, that never-failing absorber between our warring temperaments.

A Friendly Mood, But—

A distinctly friendly mood I found was mine when I had finished, and I think Dicky also had lost much of his combativeness. But the bitterness that lay between us tended to think so, for there was a flash of displeasure in his eyes, and an edge to his voice as he answered hotly.

"Why shouldn't she? When she lived with Harriet and Edwin, she was absolute dictator. Harriet devoted herself to Edwin and mother ran the house, and ran it to perfection, I can tell you. The maids were models, and everything went like clockwork. Here she feels hampered, naturally, by your refusal to give her any authority. And just let me tell you, it wouldn't hurt that chimpanzee you've got in the kitchen to have a little of mother's discipline."

"Perhaps you'd like to have me subjected to the same disciplining process," I said in a voice choked with anger. "I'll promise to think it over, and if I decide to submit myself to conditions but little better than those of the slaves before the civil war, I'll notify you. In the meantime suppose we change the subject?"

Dicky sprang to his feet with a muttered imprecation. "We'll do that little thing right now," he said. "Will you kindly tell me what Lil means by sending Mollie Fawcett out here?"

Whenver, my doughty mother-in-law had seized the reins, something which frequently happened, it had been because of my own indulgence of her, not Dicky's. Because of this remembrance I clipped back the caustic comment upon my tongue, and substituted words which I fondly believed to be innocuous.

"Yes, she would like that," I said, smiling.

But evidently Dicky either thought I meant to be offensive, or preferred to think so, for there was a flash of displeasure in his eyes, and an edge to his voice as he answered hotly.
