

The New Street-Connecting Viaduct and "Motor-Truck" Hog House Is Rapidly

The "STREET-CONNECTING VIADUCT" is rapidly nearing completion. This superstructure, 72 ft. in width and 2,054 ft. in length, built of steel and concrete, on concrete piers supported on 2,352 foundation piles, extends from "L" Street south across the stock yards to and along the west face of the Live Stock Exchange Building, where it turns and extends eastward parallel with the "O" Street Viaduct to its west truss span. The viaduct is a heavy framework of fabricated steel amounting to 3,300 tons and carries a reinforced concrete floor for a roadway

63 feet wide, between curbs, and one sidewalk, 7 feet wide. The middle portion of the roadway is paved with brick and the remainder is surfaced with asphalt. Ample space is provided, not only for a double street railway track and a driveway on each side of it, but also for the parking of about 500 automobiles and other vehicles along the curb. An ornamental iron panel fence and railing extends along each side of the viaduct floor. With the exception of this fence, all of the steel-work is protected and rendered absolutely fireproof throughout with a 3-inch concrete encasement.

Forty-nine electric lamps, 600 candle-power each, with reflectors of the latest type, will provide an abundance of light for night traffic. The
