The Little Black Kitten Wanted to See the World

The little black kitten with a funny white spot over one eye was very curious about the big world that lay just outside of the garden where she was supposed to play and sleep all day. She had enjoyed the garden very much as long as Mary and John had been home through the long days of ummer vacation and had found time to play with her.

Now every day saw them take their books and go through that garden gate and she was to stay contentedly at home dozing in the September sunshine. One day it seemed very dull and stupid in the garden without the voices and gay laughter of Mary and John.

"I think I'll go for a walk and see for myself the big world," thought the kitten, so she washed her face and started out. She walked slowly at first and then began to run up one street and down another until she was lost. 'Meow! Meow!" she cried. No one paid any attention to her. Everyone was in a hurry and no one stopped to bother with a little lost kitten.

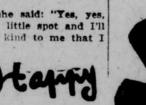

Then she ran into a garden because it made her think of home. There she found a grandmother sitting knitting and the kitten was very glad she had found someone who did not seem to be rushing along.

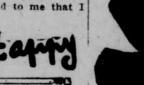

The kitten was so glad that she jumped on to that seat herself and began purring softly. She was trying to tell grandma how sorry she was she had run away from home.

Grandmother seemed to understand perfectly, for she said: "Yes, yes, you queer kitten! I know who you are by that funny little spot and I'll take you home myself. Mary and John are always so kind to me that I am glad to do something for them."

THE SQUAW LADY

'Well! Well!" thought the kitten as she rode home in grandmother's kind arms. "Its a fine world after all," And then she purred softly in grandmother's ear: "Thank you! Thank you!"
