Ford Withdrawal News at Capital

Washington Considers Political Effect of Removing Muscle Shoals Bid.

Washington, Oct. 14.—Official Washington today was considering what effect announcement of the withdrawal of Henry Ford from the bidding for Muscle Shoals would have on the political situation and the development of the gigantic government properties.

Apparently the Detroit manufacturer, after occupying the center of the stage in a heated controversy that consumed the attention of congress for two years, has voluntarily withdrawn and announced his position.

So far as can be learned the White House, War department and congressional committees dealing directly with Muscle Shoals, have received no official information of withdrawal.

Washington was equally interested in Ford's reported advocacy of the administration's proposal to create an impartial commission to study the Muscle Shoals question and submit recommendations to congress, and also in his quoted statement that he believed army engineers could carry the work forward if unhampered.

During the committee hearing the Ford supporters opposed both these proposals and charged they were merely measures to thwart the Ford bid.

If Ford actually has retired from the bidding, members of congress favoring his bid will probably establish affiliations with other groups before December, when the Muscle Shoals issue will come up on the senate calendar as the first order of business.

Transit Problem Here Is Critical

Chamber of Commerce Names Investigating Committee to "Iron Out Creases."

The municipal affairs committee of the Chamber of Commerce, after a preliminary survey of the transit situation in Omaha, has reported to the executive committee of the chamber that conditions have reached a critical stage.

On the recommendation of the committee a special committee was appointed to make a thorough investigation and try to work out a solution that will be of benefit to both the public and the Omaha & Council Bluffs Street Railway company. Such problems as the perpetual franchise, extensions and a reasonable return to the company for adequate services rendered its patrons will be gone into, it was announced.

To Iron Out Creases.

Guy C. Kiddoo was elected chairman of the committee. With the other members he will be present at the city hall at 10 Wednesday morning when officials of the street railway will meet with representatives of the state railway commission and the city to attempt to iron out the creases in the traction difficulties of Omaha.

Commissioner Clark Powell of the Chamber of Commerce said the organization, in the interest of the city at large, was cognizant that the present troubles should be remedied. He said the chamber was convinced that the public should get the best possible service; that new lines should be built in sections now lacking adequate

Norton Ignores Green's Queries

Democratic Candidate Talks Generalities to Small Omaha Audience.

A politician once upon a time, in conversation with newspaper men, was quoted as saying, "Write what you want about me, but don't ignore me."

J. N. Norton, democratic candidate for governor, here on Monday, didn't exactly say that, but during his address at Labor temple in the evening, before a small audience, stated during his foreword, "I would rather be criticized than be ignored."

"I don't intend the opposition to divert me," he added, referring to questions put to him by W. H. Green, secretary of the state central committee of the progressive party. He ignored these questions, which some persons consider pertinent at this time. He evaded this questionary and merely dismissed it with the assertion that while serving in the legislature he endeavored to represent his district.

He took cognizance of a question asked with reference to the Ku Klux Klan, by Dan B. Butler, progressive candidate for governor. He stated he is not a member of the Klan. His verbal reply on this subject follows:

"I do not intend to permit the opposition to divert my discussion away from the real issues in this campaign. But, so that there may be no misunderstanding regarding my attitude and position on religious liberty, I here state that my position and attitude on this question is the same as that of John W. Davis, the democratic candidate for president. I am in favor of the constitutional guarantees of religious liberty. I am opposed to religious bigotry and intolerance in every form and by whomsoever practiced.

"I am not a member of the Ku Klux Klan and have only such information regarding it as is a matter of general knowledge. If any organization, no matter what it chooses to be called, whether Ku Klux Klan, or by any other name, raises the standard of racial or religious prejudice, or attempts to make racial origins or religious beliefs the test of fitness for public office, it does violence to the spirit of the American constitution, and must be condemned by all those who believe as I do in American ideals."

Having disposed of the Klan subject, he entered into a rapid discourse of generalities about the farmer and state government, and he told a few stories to relieve the tension.

"You have heard told that I am a farmer," he said. "I don't know whether this is for or against me. When I discuss economic problems, I do so from the standpoint of a farmer to a certain extent."

"If I am elected governor," he added, "I want a legislature that will work with me, because it is difficult for a governor to work alone."

"I have been asked if I would sell gasoline and coal," he said. "I will state that if elected I will consider it my duty to protect the public interests. If I found a monopoly I would endeavor to break it. If I found that consumers were being gouged I would bring the state into competition. But I do not believe that a candidate should be expected to commit himself on everything he expects to do."

J. H. Hawley, county chairman, presided. He introduced George Norman and I. J. Dunn, who spoke briefly.
