Mrs. Wilcox Hostess.

Mrs. W. A. Wilcox will be hostess Thursday at 2 p. m. at her home for the Pilgrims' club.

Tuttle-McClelland.

Mr. and Mrs. William Tuttle of Omaha announce the marriage of their daughter, Ruth, to Elmer McClelland, Jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. E. E. McClelland of Alliance. The wedding took place October 4 at the First Christian church of Council Bluffs. The wedding was a quiet affair, with only relatives and close friends attending. Out-of-town guests were Harriett McClelland and Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Souders, sisters of the groom. Mr. McClelland is attending the new school at Omaha and belongs to Nu Sigma Xi fraternity. They will make their home here.

Lichtenstiger-Schwarz.

The marriage of Miss Doris Lichtenstiger to Clarence Eugene Schwarz took place Saturday. Rev. Benjamin Evans, D.D., and Rabbi Frederick Cohen performed the ceremony. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. J. E. Lichtenstiger of Lincoln. She attended Sacred Heart of Omaha and the university, and has been teaching for the past three years. Mr. Schwarz is the son of Mr. and Mrs. M. Schwarz of Shelbyville, Ky., and is a graduate of Purdue university. For the present they will make their home in Bellevue.

Ficke-Grossman.

The marriage of Miss Lillian Ficke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Ficke of David City, to Otto Grossman of Omaha took place at St. Magdalene parish in Omaha, September 30. Rev. Father Finney read the marriage lines in the presence of the bride's family. Mr. and Mrs. Grossman will make their home in Omaha.

War Mothers Entertain.

Omaha chapter of American War Mothers will entertain for Mrs. J. F. Claybaugh, Nebraska "state war mother," at the home of Mrs. Otis Reeves, 2344 North Fiftieth avenue, Wednesday evening, October 15.

Mrs. Claybaugh spent the past week in Milwaukee, where she attended the national board meeting of the American War Mothers.

Job's Daughters Council.

Speakers on Convention Program

Miss Julia Lathrop, one of the speakers on the program at the state convention of the League of Women Voters, in Lincoln next week, who was born in Rockford, Ill., is one of a group of noted women who have given Hull house international fame. Since 1899 she has been a volunteer resident there for considerable period, and her interest in philanthropy in general, dates almost from her graduation from Vassar 19 years earlier. She has served as president of the Illinois Society for Mental Hygiene, and as vice president of the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy and of the Juvenile Protective association. Her work for child welfare was recognized in 1912 by her appointment as director of the newly established children's bureau in Washington, a position she held under three presidents. She has written many reports and special articles on child welfare, civil service, the care of the insane, and kindred subjects and is well known as a lecturer as she is as a writer and administrative officer. In 1923 Miss Lathrop was elected first vice president and is in charge of the legislative work.

Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the children's bureau, United States Department of Labor, is a native of Nebraska and one of Nebraska's illustrious women. She was born at Grand Island and graduated from the high school of that city. In 1898 she received her Ph. B. from Grand Island college; University of Nebraska, 1902-03, and in 1909, her Ph. M. of political science from the University of Chicago. For seven years, Miss Abbott lived at Hull house, Chicago. She was also director of the Chicago League for the Protection of Immigrants. In 1917, she was appointed director of the child labor division of the children's bureau.

Young Hostess: Everyone is ready to frolic at a Halloween party and a wise hostess plans a game or two to start the party for which there are prizes for the winners. An amusing one is called Blind Fortune. Three apples are suspended on strings from a wire or piece of twine stretched across the room. One has a bachelor's button concealed in it, another a wedding ring, and a third a spinster's thimble. The guests are blindfolded and turned around three times, then sent forward, one at a time, with the right hand raised to grasp an apple. If the guests are children toothpicks of different lengths are inserted in the apples and a prize given to the winner of the longest stick.

The time-honored custom of bobbing for apples at a Halloween party is out of the question for many of us who live in modern apartments, for where could one find an old-fashioned wooden washtub? An up-to-date version of this stunt is to place two apples on opposite sides of a kitchen chair. Two contestants, their hands tied behind their backs, kneel beside the chair and try to eat the entire apple.

Another fortune-telling stunt is called "The Mermaid's Fortune." Each guest is given 10 or 15 large single letters cut from a newspaper. At a sign from the hostess, one after another places his letters in a bowl of water and gives the water one vigorous stir. When the water has become still the hostess will read the future from the grouping of the letters. She may use her imagination as far as she likes by telling the initials of the future mate and other important events to come.

L. T.: A men in keeping with a Halloween color scheme is as follows: Orange and Grapefruit Salad. Raisin Bread Sandwiches with Pimento and Cream Cheese. Orange and Lemon Cookies. Orange Sherbert.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dunker and Mrs. Val Bach will attend the wedding in Lincoln Wednesday morning of Miss Darrine Turner to Francis Paige.

The Unexpected Aid Marion Brought Madge.

My confident promise to Dicky that I would manage his mother's trip to Marvin if he would leave the matter to me loomed terrifyingly before me as the door closed behind him, and I began to look over the garments he had brought to me for mending.

With other old people and children, Mother Graham shares the propensity to grievous disappointment if anything she has counted on is denied her or even postponed. That she had set her heart upon going to Marvin early in the morning, I knew, and just how to alter her plans I had no idea as yet.

I was determined, however, not to permit myself to be overcome by her disappointment into driving her in myself, unless the repairing of Dicky's clothing should take much less time than I estimated. Once I nearly had gone to sleep at the wheel of the car, and the terror which swept me for that instant never had been effaced from my memory. The mending I saw in front of me would occupy me far into the night, and I would not risk driving with only two hours sleep as I should have to do, if I complied with Dicky's request.

I looked over the clothing methodically, putting in one pile those garments which needed only the sewing on of buttons, in another those that required but slight mending, and in a third the really difficult things, jagged tears which called for the closest attention and the utmost skill I possessed.

"Mayn't I Help You?"

Marion's knock sounded on the door before I had finished sorting them, and in response to my summons, she entered, with Junior as ever close to her heels.

"Junior wants to play with his train, Auntie Madge," she said, and his grandmother said he couldn't have it in her room, and that it was in here anyway."

Uncolsciously, I knew, for Marion's innate and mother-trained courtesy is always exquisite, her voice reproduced Mother Graham's carping tones, and I suppressed both a smile at the innocent burlesque and a sigh at the distraction which my small son's imitation of being a railroad engineer would prove.

"Of course, Marion," I said resignedly, "but put it over near the window. I have all this sewing over here."

Her eyes widened at the sight of the clothing, and into them came an excited sparkle.

"Oh! Auntie Madge!" she exclaimed "Mayn't I help you? You know I won a prize at school for mending, and mother has had me taught sewing for a long while."

"Yes, I know," I responded, smiling, and remembering Lillian's whimsical declaration that she did not mean her small daughter to grow up as useless in domestic arts as she was. Not that Lillian is incapable. She can cook and mend, but she does not do them easily nor with any especial skill. But even though I knew of Marion's needlework, unusual for a child, I looked dubiously at her with the reluctance of any expert needlewoman—for without conceit I may call myself that—to share her work with anyone.

"I'll tell you what, Auntie Madge," Marion said, with the curious presence of childhood. "You just let me try some button or bit of mending which isn't important, then if I don't do it right, you don't need to let me help any more."

Ashamed of my doubt, I put my arm's around Lillian's winsome daughter and hugged her tightly.

"There isn't anything here so important you can't work on it, I am sure," I said. "In this pile are the things that need buttons, and here is the button box!"

"Oh! Goody!" she exclaimed as pleased as if I had provided her with the most fascinating game in the world.

"I want to sew on buttons, too," Junior exclaimed, his desire to be an engineer palpably fading before his new joy.

"So you shall, sweetheart," Marion exclaimed. "I'll give you a piece of cloth and some buttons, and a needle and thread. Just wait until I get my workbasket."

She whisked out of the room, coming back in a few minutes, with a fascinating little sewing-iron tied around her waist, and all the implements of needlework in a charming sewing-basket which I recognized as one of her last year's Christmas presents. From it she fished out a stout piece of muslin, with several buttons fastened to it with immense sprawling stitches.

"Junior did these all himself," she said with pride, and then she threaded a needle for my son, and provided him with buttons enough to keep him busy the rest of the afternoon.

I expected Junior to tire of his task, but he kept at it as steadily as did Marion at her chosen work. To my astonishment, I found that the little girl could turn out the simpler bits of mending as fast and as neatly as I could, and dusk found us all busily working.

"Better switch on the light, dear," I said to her, and as she obeyed, I was startled to hear her utter a little scream.

"There was a face—looking in at the window!" she gasped.
