Women Witness Squash Matches at Club

More than a hundred women saw a squash match Thursday night for the first time. Though the game has been played in Omaha for several years, women are seldom admitted in the galleries.

There were "no wolds" at the University club Halloween dinner dance. While tables were being cleared from the dance floor, the squash exhibition was provided as entertainment. Bridge and pool consisted of groups of men who gallantly left for women the space provided for squash spectators.

George Stocking, local champion, was matched against Rodney Given, who comes from Mr. Kinsella, world champion, New York. Mr. Stocking won the first game with a score of 6-15, and Mr. Given the second two with 15-1 and 15-13.

Women play squash in the east, especially at girls' schools. They can play the game with as much pleasure and benefit as men, in the opinion of Mr. Stocking. It is only as speedy as the players make it and is an ideal way of getting exercise quickly, Mr. Stocking declares.

Mr. Given, is here for the University club to remain until March.

Speaker at Big Republican Rally at Brandeis Theater Saturday Night

Mrs. Mary Haight of Chicago, speaker for the republican national committee, is a lecturer and speaker of national reputation. During the Harding campaign in 1920 she addressed large audiences in every big city in the country and her return was repeatedly asked for in many of the states.

During the past few years Mrs. Haight has been devoting much time to writing. She is the author of "The Romance and Tragedy of Famous Jewels." Mrs. Haight is nationally known among the club women of the country for her illustrated lecture on "Famous Jewels." In illustrating her lectures Mrs. Haight uses crystal replicas, the exact size, shape, weight and color of the originals.

Before her marriage she was on the stage under the direction of Charles Frohman. For many years she was known to theatergoers. It was not until after her marriage to a Chicago business man that she retired from the stage. At one time Mrs. Haight was director of the dramatic department at Northwestern university.

Your Problems

Martha Allen

Wait Till of Age.

Dear Miss Allen: I am 19 and have gone with a boy for the last four years who is now 22. He is getting a good salary and so am I. He is a boy of good morals and high character. Now, Miss Allen, my family object to our getting married and give as their reason I am too young. They want me to go to college, but as it is they can do the right thing, Mary Allen, but when they can not help me I think that they are a bit selfish to insist.

I realize that they are my parents and have a right to expect certain things of their children, and that is why I am coming to you for advice. What shall I do?

MARY JANE.

Those busy parents want something better for their children than they have themselves—college, comforts and all good things. However, you sound like a fine, sensible girl, and if you have gone with the boy for four years you must like each other. Suppose you wait till you're 21. Then marry if you are still of your present mind.

M. G. R.: Write the boy a letter and explain why you were not able to see him. Invite him to come and see you again. Just be your best and finest self, and hope that he will return your regard. You can't make him love you; and if you get desperate and act silly you will surely drive him away. Learn to control yourself as to conduct and appearance. Stop using the paint, dear. It never made a young girl prettier yet. I have no moral objections to rouge. It is as harmless in itself as sawdust, but it doesn't do the thing you think it does. It makes you less distinctive and less girlish and sweet.

Dear Miss Allen: I have been going with a man two years my senior for the last two months. He is now being attentive to a young lady who is engaged to be married. Should I object to this or just quit going with him? If a boy's mother invites you to their home, should you accept? Is it proper to go to a boy's home if his mother isn't there? PERPLEXED.

Since you are not engaged to this man you do not have the right to ask him to discontinue his friendship with the other girl. Your attitude is wrong. The fact that a man has shown he likes you gives you no license to think you can regulate his friendships. If you were engaged, there would be some differences, though even then you ought not to deprive him of the right to do a little thinking for himself.

It is proper to accept an invitation to the home, when invited by a boy's mother. Never go to his house in his mother's absence or without her invitation.

Don't Worry.

Dear Miss Allen: For almost a year I have gone with a man I like and he seemed to like me. But lately he has come to see me only once in a while and hardly ever calls up. He is going with another girl who is not well thought of. He never takes her any place like he did me, but he goes to her house a lot. Do you think he cares for her? JOE.

At least he doesn't care for you, does he? That is the important thing for you to understand. Don't waste any time in hating or being envious. Interest yourself in some one else and forget him.

A Wife's Confessional

Adele Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE (Copyright, 1924.)

Why Madge Agreed to Bess Dean's Plan.

The instinct for hair pulling and face scratching is not confined to primitive women. I understood that perfectly at Bess Dean's hateful little laugh and her tacit admission that by omitting to mail a letter from me to Alice Holcombe Stockbridge she had put a stop to a pleasant correspondence and made me doubt the sincerity of my former colleague's friendship and gratitude. I felt my fingers fairly itching to slap her soundly, but, instead, I managed a smile and a careless:

"I shouldn't be surprised in the least. You always did take the crown for your lack of memory." She knew that I was speaking an inch at a time. She queried with an innocent smile. "Never mind, old thing, you've got nothing on me in the way of dosh, expressed or suppressed. What I could do to you—"

She broke off with a grain and drew on her sober manner as she might an extra sweater.

"As for our str-r-rained r-relations, she isn't going to suspect 'em from me," she went on briskly. "I'm going to tell her we're both so thundering busy that since you've been downing the east end of the island we've seen very little of each other. Of course, liking us both as she does—the poor fish, she's got rotten taste, looking at us from either angle—she's going to try to get us together again, all join hands and rally round the flag of friendship, girls, and all the rest of it."

"It's going to be a nauseous draught, old-thing—Providence help the poor sailor this night at sea—but I'm game to let her go as far as she likes if you are. She probably won't come east again for a century or two, and—they don't make 'em any better than Allie Holcombe. I'd hate to saddle her visit, and you know she'd be just fool enough to let a thing like that spoil it."

In spite of the many meannesses of which I knew her to be guilty, I found myself nearer liking Bess Dean in this instant than I had supposed possible.

But I knew of old that her friendship for Alice Holcombe was probably the strongest emotion she possessed, and as I drove away, after again assuring her of my co-operation in her affectionate little scheme, I wondered, not for the first time, how a woman capable of such loyalty and devotion to one friend could be so despicable in her treatment of others.

of both. I shall be entertaining Alice a goodish bit while she's here, and when I can't get out of it I shall ask you to make one of the party. Oh, you needn't get on your high horse! You'll be doing the same thing with me. Of course, when you and she get together you can waste at least three afternoons discussing the mystery of the missing letter. But you needn't lay it on me, for I shall be prepared to swear that I never saw a letter from you, nor ever hoped to see one."

She sang her atrocious little parody and then laughed openly in my face.

"I'd Hate to Sadden Her"

"Wouldn't you like to skin me, an inch at a time?" she queried with an innocent smile. "Never mind, old thing, you've got nothing on me in the way of dosh, expressed or suppressed. What I could do to you—"

She broke off with a grain and drew on her sober manner as she might an extra sweater.
