Your Problems

Martha Allen

The Unambitious Admirer.

Dear Miss Allen: About two years ago I fell in love with a young man who works in my office. He has also confessed his love for me, nevertheless we are not going about together for the reason that his salary is too small to make it possible for us to entertain serious intentions. Several times he promised to look for a better position, but evidences a lack of ambition in bringing about results. He has had ample time and opportunity to get out of his present employment if he really wanted to. On account of my constant association with him it is hard for me to break away from him, and also I find no interest in young men whom I meet.

Will you please advise me what course to pursue.

A CONSTANT READER.

As you have often spoken to him about this matter, I don't see what you can do except refuse to take him too seriously as a friend. Certainly if he loved you and wished to marry you he would make reasonable efforts to better himself financially.

Take an interest in your other young men friends. This you can do if you determine to break away from the bonds of an affection that seems a waste of time as far as any hope of marriage is concerned.

An Overlooked Advantage.

Dear Miss Allen: Will you please answer this question if you can? I am about two to three inches over six feet tall. Find as I might, I can see no advantages in being tall. Can you help me? I am a young man. Hoping to see this answered, I remain, SILIM.

Yes, there is one advantage you have evidently overlooked. It gives you something to think about; otherwise your mind might be a blank.

Good Luck to You.

Dear Miss Allen: I am in love with a man of 22. I am 18. He has asked me to marry him in another year. Do you think we are too young to marry? Neither of us has parents living.

Nineteen is rather young for a girl to take up the responsibilities of life. But under the circumstances, as neither has a home, it is not too young. All happiness to you both.

What the Strange Chinese Did to Reassure Madge

At the unexpected apparition of a Chinese from the bushes behind me, I fought down the scream that rose in my throat, and springing backward, swept Junior behind me, while my fingers went instinctively to the hiding place in my gown where lay the little silver pistol which at Katie's entreaty I had brought with me. How absurd my little maid's urging had seemed but a few short hours before—and now—

"Misses Graham, no need to shoot. Lee Chow come for good not evil. Misses Graham look at Lee Chow. Lee Chow not hurt. No can do."

He folded his arms across his chest and stood motionless patiently waiting for my critical inspection, and though he was attired in conventional American clothing, I seemed suddenly to breathe the intriguing air of the Orient.

I visualized him in his native costume standing thus with slightly bowed head and arms folded, and something in the absolute stillness and calmness of his posture brought a certain reassurance to my soul although I did not take my hand from the tiny pistol in my dress.

Junior tugged at my skirt with a whispered, "Let me see him, mama. I like him lots," and with a remembrance of my often expressed belief in the old saying concerning the correct institutions of children and animals, I permitted him to stand at one side of me while I gave to the mysterious new comer the inspection he had invited.

I saw a man just below medium height, not especially slender, but with no suspicion of squintness in his figure. There was a suggestion of great muscular strength about him, although his features at the first glimpse of them were those of a comedian instead of an athlete. Indeed, there was something so mirth-provoking in his face, so different from that of any other man of his race I had ever seen that I subjected his features to a much more rigid scrutiny than if they had been of the ordinary variety.

Why Has He Come?

His eyes glared so far upward that the corners appeared to be far up in his forehead, and to crinkle constantly with suppressed mirth. His nose was unusually flattened, and the wide nostrils were as provocative to amused laughter as those of a famous movie comedian.

His face was the kind which has been immortalized as "low comedy," and it took me several seconds to discover that the fixed grin his mouth presented was the result of a scar long since healed which looked exact-

Constipation makes bright children dull— give them relief with Kellogg's Bran

Constipation dulls the youthful mind—makes children backward in their studies—makes them listless—and can lead to serious diseases. Constipation is a dangerous disease.

You cannot afford to take chances in getting relief. You cannot afford to experiment or put off. Kellogg's Bran brings relief—permanent relief if eaten regularly. Even in the most chronic cases of constipation it is guaranteed to bring results. If it fails, your grocer will return your money.

Kellogg's Bran, cooked and krumbled, has brought relief to thousands because it is ALL bran. Remember, only ALL bran can be 100 per cent effective. That is why Kellogg's Bran is recommended by doctors. It sweeps, cleans and purifies the intestines. It causes regular, healthy, normal action. For it works as nature works. It is ALL bran.

Have your children eat it regularly—two tablespoonfuls daily—in chronic cases, with every meal. Eat it with milk or cream. Sprinkle it over other cereals. Cook it with hot cereals. Try it in the wonderful recipes on every package.

The flavor is delicious—a crisp, nut-like flavor that delights the taste. Different by far from ordinary bran, which are unpalatable.

Begin serving Kellogg's Bran, cooked and krumbled, to your children to-day. Eat it yourself. The leading hotels and clubs serve it. Made in Battle Creek. It is sold by all grocers.

ly as if his lips had been clipped with shears on either side.

Other scars were responsible for the unusual slant of his eyes, and his nose had been broken at one time and healed apparently without medical attention. His features looked exactly as if some malevolent tyrant had purposely altered them in order to provide himself with cruel laughter. I found myself intensely interested in tracing the strong somber lineaments as they must have appeared before his injuries, even though I knew that never should I be able to look at him without feeling the impulse to smile.

"Were You at My Home?"

As far as I could discover, he had materialized out of the thin air, although of course he might have been lurking in the bushes before our arrival at the beach. That would have meant a knowledge of my projected movements, and no one but myself knew that I had decided upon this particular beach.

I had heard no noise of a motor car—just above my head there dropped an airplane, and with a start I wondered if my movements had been traced from the air. And then with a smile of contempt at my own fanciful ideas, I saw that the plane was the sedan U. S. mail. But that the man's face was the one that Marion saw outside my window the night before was something which my common sense told me was true—this man knew my identity, and evidently for some reason of his own wished audience with me. With sudden resolution, I spoke sternly:

"Were you at my home last night?" He lifted his head and unfolded his arms.

"Yes, Misses Graham."

"Did you climb on my porch, and look in my window?"

"Yes, Misses Graham."

"Why?" I was too breathless to add anything else to my question, for mystery, subtle, overpowering, lurked in the air.

With slow deliberation he drew from his pocket a card and held it out to me. I took it with hands that suddenly trembled, for it was a snapshot which Hugh Grantland had long ago taken from me.
