

The Police of the vast Egyptian Desert. The Egyptian Camel Corps which polices the whole of the great Egyptian desert, officered by British. —Wide World Photo

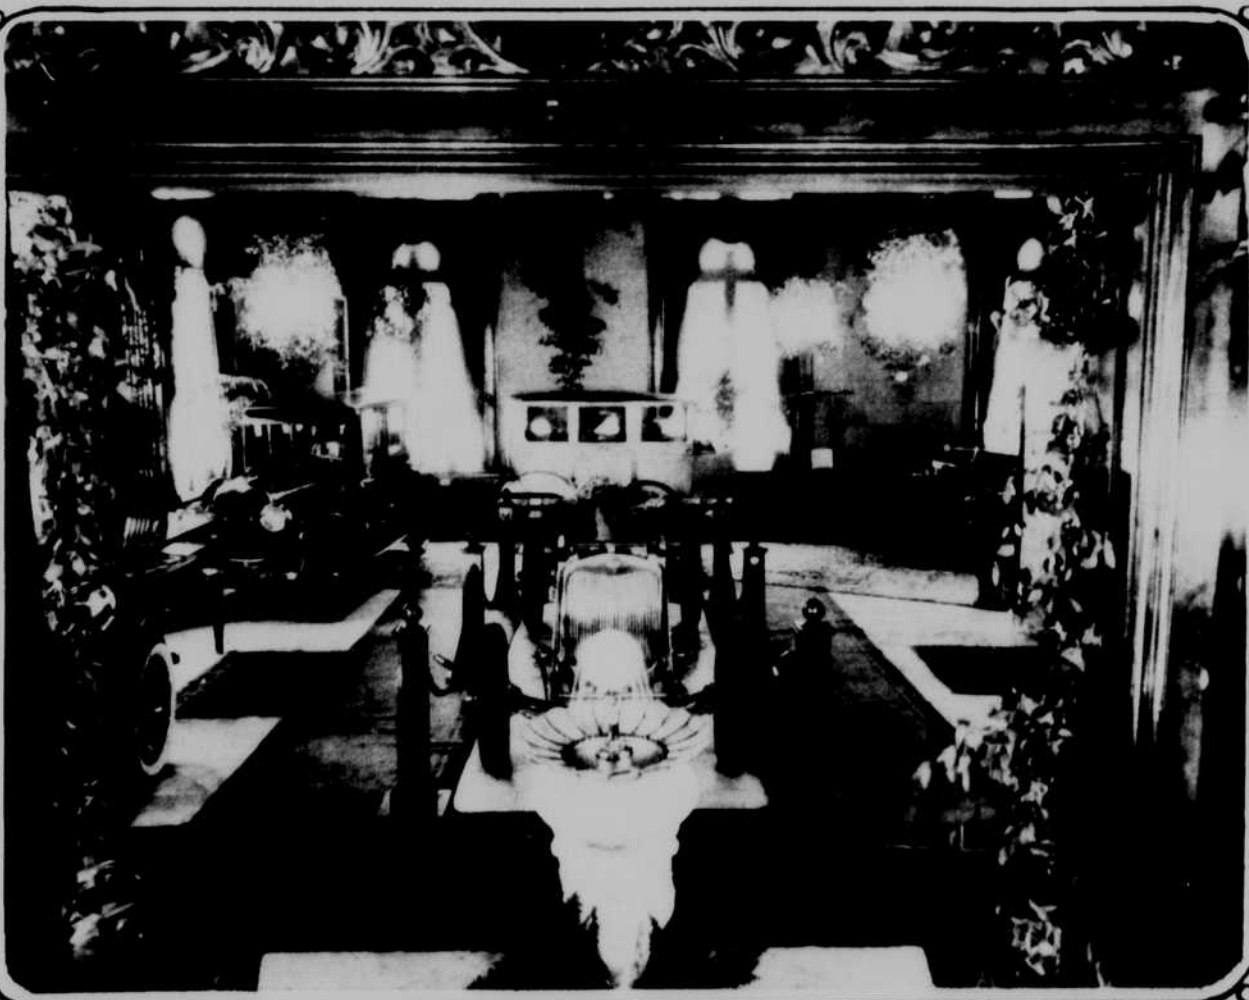

The Luck of the Jungle. A lion killing a zebra, one of the few photographs of its kind ever taken. Mr. Klein of the American Museum of Natural History, while the picture was being taken, was surprised by another lion which came to the killing, and was brought down by a shot just in time or the killing may have been reversed. —Wide World Photo

A sight to make primitive man feel at home in the modern world. Elephants going single file across the slopes of Ruwenzori, the Mountain of the Moon, in East Africa, where Mr. Klein spent fourteen years. —Wide World Photo

Illinois Legionnaires perpetuate the "Doughboys" mode of travel. They call themselves the "Forty and Eight." They had this odd looking caravan built to attend state and national encampments. The "locomotive" was designed from an automobile. —Wide World Photo

A Scene from Lincoln Petit Salon recently held in the Palm Room of the Fontenelle Hotel. The Salon offered by the Ford Motor Company was devoted to an exclusive showing of Lincoln Motor Cars and was said by hundreds who attended, to be the most elaborate display of quality motor cars ever brought to Omaha. —Wide World Photo
