Gas From Car Fatal to Commission Man

Charles G. Root

Exhaust Fumes Fatal to South Omaha Stockman

Charles G. Root Overcome by Monoxide Gas in Garage While Repairing Car; Wife Discovers Body.

Charles G. Root, 46, 3904 South Twenty-fifth street, livestock commission man at South Omaha, was found dead in his garage at 4 Friday morning by his wife, Grace. He was a victim of carbon monoxide gas produced by the automobile engine.

Thursday evening, Mr. Root went out to the garage to fix his car to be ready to go to the railroad station at 5 Friday morning to meet his daughter, Helen, a freshman at the state university, who was returning for the week-end.

At 4 in the morning she awakened and was startled to find that he had not been to bed. She hurried down stairs, looked through the rooms and then hastened out to the garage.

The doors were closed and there on the floor lay her husband. Tools with which he had been tuning up the engine were by his side and the engine was still running.

Treasurer of Church. She staggered to a telephone and summoned help. Mr. Root was president of the Traders' Exchange, a Thirty-second degree Mason, a Shriner and treasurer of Grace Methodist church. He was born on a farm near the Douglas county line on West Center street, graduated from Central High school and then went into business with his brother.

He is survived by his wife, daughters Helen and Grace, the latter a freshman in South High school; his brother, J. B. of Omaha, and a brother, Lou of California, and sisters, Mrs. C. B. Bower of Butte City, Cal., and Mrs. Pauline Gifford of Maymont, Canada.

Omaha Sportsmen Released on Writ of Habeas Corpus

Technicality Frees Two Who Served Five Months on Charge of Selling Liquor.

"Slim Billy" Fox and "Curly" Fagenberg, leading figures in Omaha sporting circles, walked out of the federal building Friday afternoon, free men.

They were freed at a habeas corpus hearing before Federal Judge Woodrough, after spending five months in the county jail at Fremont on a charge of selling beer.

The men gained their freedom through a technicality in the manner of sentencing. They were sentenced by Judge McGee last July to serve two terms each on liquor charges, the sentences to run consecutively.

Judge Munger recently ruled that this could not be done. The appearance before Judge Woodrough Friday afternoon was the legal result of Judge Munger's decision, and he ordered that the men should be freed when they had paid their fines of $500 each.

Neither man was able to pay the fine and were released after making sworn statements before United States Commissioner Boehler that they had no property and could not pay the fines.

John Fanesia of Grand Island, who was convicted and sentenced last June, gained his freedom in the same manner at a hearing before Judge Woodrough Friday. Attorneys for a number of other men convicted and sentenced by Judge McGee are expected to file habeas corpus petitions at once as a result of the action in the Fox and Fagenberg cases.

Burgess Bedtime Stories Ready for Winter. Paddy the Beaver and Mrs. Paddy sat on their dam eating the bark from some willow branches they had brought over there.

"Well, old Jack Frost can come just as soon as he pleases," declared Paddy between bites. "We are all ready for him."

Mrs. Paddy nodded. "I for one am thankful," said she. "Isn't it a relief to have that food pile ready and not have to expose ourselves to danger any more? I don't mind work, but to have to work with the knowledge that any minute you may have to run for your life is hard."

But it always has been so with us Beavers, and I suppose it always will be so. Don't you think it would be a good idea to have a little more food on hand?"

"That's a good idea," said Paddy. "I'll get some more bark from the dam."

"It looks all right to me," said he, their house standing above the water
