By T. W. McCULLOUGH THE fires for 1890 campaign in Nebraska were lighted, so far as Douglas county is concerned in 1889. It would take a book to recount all the distinct political bearing.

Probably the hardest blow that hit Mr. Rosewater out of that election was the elevation of E. G. Davis to the presidency of the city council, to succeed Michael Lee. The career of the council was not the brightest, either, for some of its members became involved in a grand jury inquiry about the purchase of furniture for the city hall.

It was the city election in December, that sunk the iron into Edward Rosewater's soul. W. J. Broatch had been not an altogether satisfactory mayor, and there was most opposition to him in his own party. At the convention on November 23, delegates stuck for Broatch from first to last, and the balloting went on 73 times, or longer, till George W. Linsinger finally emerged with a majority, and was declared the nominee of the republican party for mayor. Richard C. Cushing was chosen by the democrats.

The campaign was short, sharp, and bitter. Perhaps it was the most acrimonious in the history of the city. Democrats went after Linsinger without mercy, and the republican party personalities of all sorts were passed around, and the news columns of the papers fairly outdid the editorial pages. Nothing of the sort would be tolerated nowadays. Election day came, and Cushing was elected. But John Rush, Charley Goodrich and Lee Hellsley, all republicans, were elected city treasurer, city controller and police judges, by about the same majority as that given Cushing. This confirmed Mr. Rosewater in his belief that the Broatch supporters had double-crossed Linsinger. His editorial in the Omaha Bee on the following day is a splendid example of his mastery of invective, and the vitriolic quality of his wrath, when he chose to pour it out. Favor Cushing's administration was not a very happy one, for the republicans had control of the city council, and he must needs compromise with them on about everything he had to offer. In 1891 Mr. Rosewater had his inning, when he backed Hon. George F. Bemis, who served the city four years. First came the order from the police board headed by Mayor Broatch, establishing what came to be known as "the Burnt District." Followed a more or less futile attempt to enforce the Sunday closing feature of the Sloumch law. The Dorset subway scandal. Street railway consolidation. Location of the post office and city hall at their present sites. Investigation of the county hospital contract. Battle between "Mike" Roach and L. M. Anderson over the books of the county clerk's office.

All of these things and more affected politics. Mostly in favor of the democrats. It was not a good year for Edward Rosewater, but he fought determinedly on. At the November election of Johnny Boyd defeated Billy Eburn for sheriff, and a democrat went into the second best paying office in the county. Frank E. Moores, republican, was clerk of the courts the richest of the local fee officers, and Adam Schneider, democrat, was elected county treasurer, to succeed Henry Bohm, republican. Dick O'Keefe (distinguished for having two fa's in his name), and Johnny Corrigan, democrats, were re-elected to the county board, and it looked like a nice time for the party.

It was the city election in December, that sunk the iron into Edward Rosewater's soul. W. J. Broatch had been not an altogether satisfactory mayor, and there was most opposition to him in his own party. At the convention on November 23, delegates stuck for Broatch from first to last, and the balloting went on 73 times, or longer, till George W. Linsinger finally emerged with a majority, and was declared the nominee of the republican party for mayor. Richard C. Cushing was chosen by the democrats.

as "Pat O'Hawes." And he never got accustomed to it. One of the popular distortions of names was that, fastened by Roger Craven on Louis Goldsmith, Goldsmith, afterwards a saloon keeper, was garbage master under Broatch, a most important office in Omaha at the time, and one for which there was considerable competition. Craven of its fees. Craven had been almost instantly dubbed "Deacon" by the gang when he showed up as police reporter for the Herald. He signalled his sense of fitness by referring in his earliest item for the paper to "Garbage M. Goldsmith." The name stuck, and in a few days was shortened to "G. M." and Louis never did get rid of it.

Most of the animosities of those days were eventually forgotten or just naturally wore themselves out, but at the time they were very real. Other editors besides Rosewater could call names, and the papers fairly bristled each day. When "Bob" Peattie was managing editor, and I was city editor of the Omaha Herald, he was not pleased if he did not find half a dozen complainants waiting for him when he came down in the morning, and my recollection is that I seldom disappointed him.

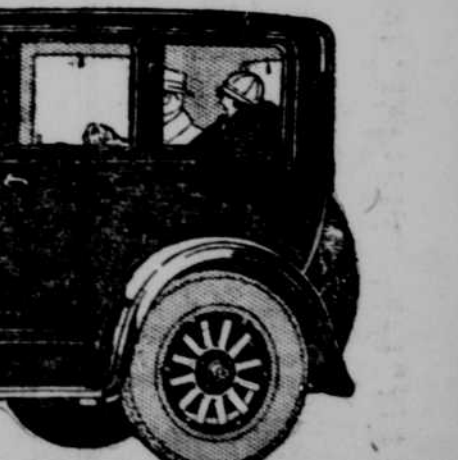

It appears that the democratic party will have to disinherit the donkey and adopt the stork if it ever expects to assemble enough voters to win—Columbia Record.
