

LEFT — Uncle Sam's sailors maintain order in Shanghai during recent battles. Various Powers each landed sailors and marines, the United States taking a leading part in maintaining order.
—Wide World

RIGHT "Cowboy," equestrian statue of inimitable fire and spirit, will be mounted on the State Capitol grounds in Austin, Texas.

Milton Allen, a Napa County, California ranch owner with the golden eagle that he shot when he caught it in the act of killing a sheep on his ranch. The bird measured seven feet from tip to tip. The eagle brazenly held on to its prey even after the rancher appeared and in consequence was shot.
—Wide World

The V. I. fleet submarine and newest type in the U. S. Navy, which is capable of accompanying and keeping up with the fleet on manoeuvres, which reported at the Washington Navy Yard, recently for inspection by Naval experts and the House of Representatives Naval Affairs Committee.
—Wide World

Otto Saur, young German and his water skis, which he recently perfected and demonstrated on a lake near Berlin. Saur has spent several years of study before he perfected his skis.
—Wide World

This little orphan at the Shrine Orphanage in San Francisco, was disappointed because they wouldn't allow her to keep this lion cub for a pet. Cubs from the lion farm of Charles Gay, were brought to the orphanage to cheer the kiddies.
—Wide World

These Herbert Kohn bathing suits of black and white cord silk, of satin brocade with black satin, and of printed tiger silk, were among the smart modes for spring shown at the Spring and Summer Revue of the Style Creators of America.
—Wide World

Samuel Shanker, hot dog vender of Boston, was hailed into court for interfering with the trade of a restaurant and fined $3. Shanker then proceeded to the owners of the building and paid $11,000 for it buying out the restaurant and all. "Couldn't afford to lose that spot," said the hot-dog man.
—Wide World