England's Latest.
Look Out, Politicians.
Mr. Stone's Enemies.
F. B. Kellogg, an American.
By ARTHUR BRIBANE.

You remember the recent destruction of the big battleship Washington, not quite finished. This country, having spent about $30,000,000 on that battleship, took it out to sea and sank it to oblige our dear friends in Europe. They didn't want us to have too many ships, especially as they couldn't compete with us. Our kindergartners statesmen destroyed and junked $100,000,000 worth of new fighting ship material. Europe and Asia junked a few old craft out of date.

Now read of two battleships about to be launched by England. A British expert says of them that they will "put all existing battleships back in the Victorian era." These ships, built without funnels, and gigantic guns built forward, are useful in a double way. The broad, low decks, clear of turrets and superstructure, supply a launching and landing place for flying ships. Carried on the deck they can leave the "mother" battleship and destroy enemy ships hundreds of miles out of gunfire and torpedo range.

This great battleship will ride out to sea, carrying her deadly battle-planes with her, and the old nobleman rode out with his hawk on his wrist, ready to be released at the sight of the prey.

England is building 50 squadrons of flying battleships and is about to launch two of the most powerful fighting ships in the world, to act as battleship carriers. And this is not to mention politicians destroy the few good ships we have, provide no fighting air ships and talk their provincial platitudes about peace. It would be laughable if it were not so very serious.

Pay those responsible, if the thousands of flying ships that Japan is turning out, at the rate of 500 a month, ever come this way and find us unprepared. There would be trouble then for some politicians, and serious trouble.

Further information would be welcome concerning the motives of individuals that oppose the president's appointment of Attorney General Stone to the supreme court.

What disturbs those that oppose the nomination? How much of the opposition is due to the fact that as soon as he was appointed Stone proceeded to select competent lawyers, such as Jerome Michael of Konta and Sirachway, in New York City, to defend the war frauds, instead of letting the grafters rest in peace?

Stone has shown himself energetic, earnest and highly capable as an attorney general, faithfully representing his client, the public. The "citizens" will regret that Stone leaves the attorney general's office, and will welcome his appointment to the supreme bench.

Concerning the appointment of Frank B. Kellogg, chosen by the president to take Hughes' place, there will be only approval. When the president sent Kellogg to the Court of St. James, he sent a genuine American, whose mind is in this country, and whose ideas are those of the United States. He will be an American secretary of state, not as we have occasionally had during the past administration, an imitation British secretary of state. If some old-fashioned American of the type of Jackson or Lincoln returned and saw Kellogg sitting at his desk, he would say, "I see they are still employing Americans on American jobs."

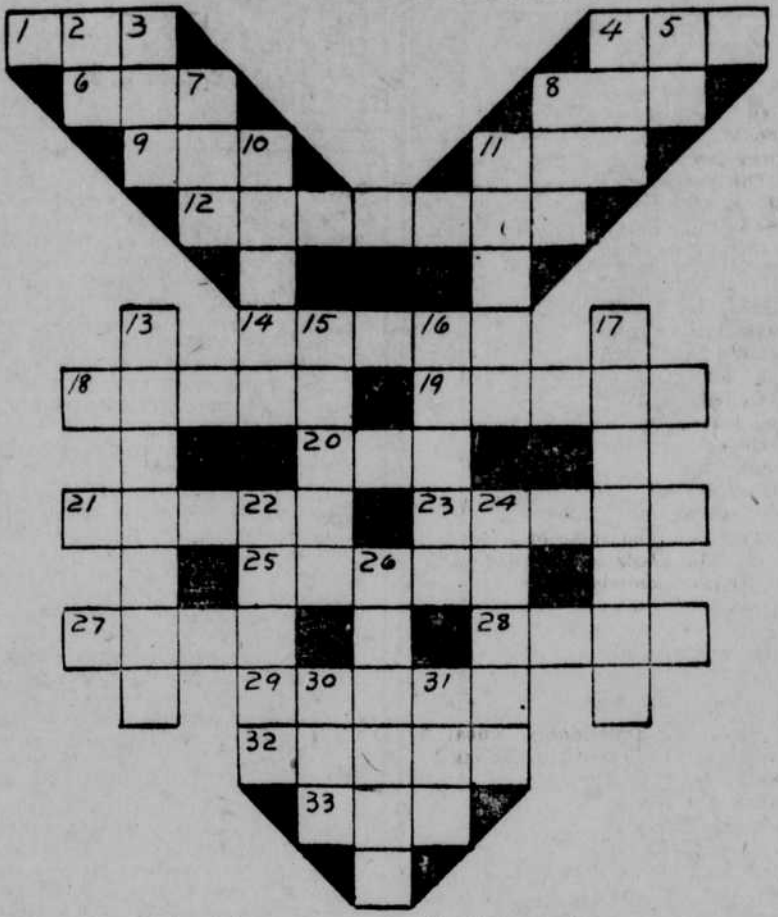

The resignation of Secretary Hughes illustrates once more the fact that the people do not sufficiently pay for the service of able men. It is utterly impossible for such a man as Hughes to live as he must live, and provide for his family, on the salary that the people pay a cabinet officer. He has been content to remain in office, using his accumulated earnings. But justice to his family compels him to return now to law practice, in which, entirely by his legal ability and entirely apart from any official influence—which is not always the case—Hughes is able with ease to earn 30 times what the people pay him.

Hughes, working for the public for 20 years, has sacrificed not less than $6,000,000, plus interest, by doing so.

Earthquake tremors disturb the Japanese. An earthquake predicted last summer for early in January, was felt last Friday, two severe shocks. Mount Aso is in eruption. The Japanese have many troubles that the brave, enterprising nation doesn't deserve.

Airmen Fly Over Shining Mosques of Ancient City

Dazzled by Sparkling Domes and Minarets of Bagdad; See Restoration of Eden.

By LOWELL THOMAS.
"Just as we were getting ready to leave Bagdad," remarked Eric Nelson, "the battery on the Chicago went dead, and it was not until 11 o'clock that we finally started west toward the Euphrates. It was a gorgeous day with perfect visibility. The golden domes and minarets of Kazmain, and the white and gold minarets of Baghdad's 66 other mosques, sparkled in the sun light as we flew over the ruined canals and irrigation channels of ancient Babylon.

"A half hour after leaving the city of the Arabian Nights we came to the region which the Mohammedans all believe was the original home of Adam and Eve. The British are now engaged in restoring this garden of Eden. If they succeed, then Mesopotamia may once more become one of the richest and most populous countries in the world, just as it was thousands of years ago in the days when the ancient kings of Babylonia built castles that were as wide as rivers and that were hundreds of miles long.

Although we did not see it, the British airmen told us they often flew the Tigris to the right of the route we were taking, and looked down upon a huge canal 300 miles long and nearly 400 feet deep, from which countless smaller canals ran in all directions.

Over Countless Buried Cities.
"For the archeologist and students of ancient history this region over which we flew both on our way up to Bagdad from Persia, and between Bagdad and Turkey, is the most fascinating on earth. There are more buried cities here than anywhere. Although we didn't see it, the British airmen told us they fly directly above the Tower of Babel, which, by the way, was used as a wireless station during the late war. The people of the east also believe it was here that Noah lived, built his ark, and cruised around during the great flood. The tombs of Jonah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Noah, and many other Biblical patriarchs are pointed out in this region and are visited by both Jewish and Mohammedan pilgrims.

"As we flew up the valley of the Euphrates and looked down on ancient Assyria, and the land of the Hittites, we were constantly passing over mounds beneath which are buried cities whose names have even been forgotten. Most of them are from 3,000 to 6,000 years old, but some may even date back for 10,000 or 15,000 years. Archeologists have already discovered tablets giving the names of more than 100 kings who ruled here before the time of Abraham. Surely this must be the most fascinating spot in all the world for the explorer, American, British and French scientists have found evidence which clearly indicates that life was as well organized in Babylon 5,000 years ago as it is in New York or London today. The laws and administrative system of Hammurabi were not so much different from our own.

"On this flight from Bagdad across the North Arabian desert to Aleppo, we followed the Euphrates most of the way. The monotony of the trip was broken by watching the tortuous course of the river, by looking for mounds that might indicate buried cities, and by dodging small sandstorms. We saw scores of 'sand devils' whirling about the desert. They seemed to travel at great speed and reminded us somewhat of the pictures of waterstarts that we used to see in our school geographies. We wondered what would happen if one of them hit us. Sometimes it required quick maneuvering, but we managed to keep out of their track, although several went whistling by within a few yards of us and made the air awfully bumpy.

"Sixty miles south of Aleppo we encountered a big one that looked like a mountain coming right across the desert toward us. Climbing to 6,000 feet we got well above it. The top of that storm was at about 4,000 feet, and the sun shining down on the whirling white particles made it look like a spinning column of vapor. At 5:30 in the afternoon we arrived over a city of flat roofed houses that looked even larger from the air than Bagdad, whence we had come. In the center of it on a high hill was a mammoth citadel with enormous crumbling walls and the tall miniature of an ancient mosque. This city was Aleppo, the capital of Saladin, the mighty Saracen conqueror who defeated Richard the Lion Hearted before the gates of Jerusalem.

"Here also was where Field Marshal Viscount Allenby, the modern crusader, got full revenge for the deeds of Coeur de Lion, for it was here that the Turkish armies finally threw down their arms before the advance of Allenby's cavalry, armored cars and airplanes; and before the onrushing Bedouins mounted on camels and horses who were led by Emir Faisal and Lawrence the mystery man.

French Fliers in Control.
"Today Aleppo is ruled by the French in connection with the mandates of Coeur de Lion, for it was here that the French armies finally threw down their arms before the advance of Allenby's cavalry, armored cars and airplanes; and before the onrushing Bedouins mounted on camels and horses who were led by Emir Faisal and Lawrence the mystery man.
