the story of the human race, its struggle from darkness to light, from bondage to freedom

'Everything that was humanly po sible has been done to bring Floyd Collins from the depths where he lies pected soon. He loved caves like some love flowers and poetry. He loved to wander among them and see the wonderful work of God engraved in the stalac tites and stalagmites, and now he lies a sarcophagus of stone. It is a mighty tribute to our country that there is so much interest in his death.

Mrs. I. D. Withers of Cave City sang "We'll Understand It Better By Jewelers Here in and By." Then Rev. Mr. Dickey mounted the stump again.

"It is a good thing Floyd Collins was not brought to the surface," he "His face was drawn with said.

Worker Praised.

"Before these services began Mr Carmichael asked me to mention the heroism of Everett Maddox. "Maddox was one of the first try to bring Floyd out of the cave but Pre he was taken sick and had to leave. But as soon as he got well he came back, Mr. Carmichael said:

Tell everybody he came back just as all of us were almost ready to quit, and he brought new spirit into us all.' It is probable that a monument to Everett Maddox, and to all the other heroic men who toiled in the shaft to rescue Floyd Collins will be erected on top of this cliff."

Worker Breaks Down.

Maddox had come from the shaft only a short time before, and was standing in the front row of the assemblage. He sat down on the ground when his name was mention and wept. A woman handed hin handkerchief and he held it over his eyes until the service was ended. Then Rev. Mr. Biser read from the 15th chapter of First Corinthians:
