Your Problems Solved by Martha Allen

Do Not Elope. Dear Miss Allen: I am a girl of 17. I have been going with a young man for three weeks and have fallen in love with him.

My parents and friends object to my going with him because he is not of my religion. They tell me that he is not the right young man for me. And when I tell them that I love him they tell me I don't know what I'm really doing. But I know I love him dearly.

I think of him day and night and he loves me. Kindly give me your advice. He has asked me to elope with him. SHIRLEY.

Your parents are right, Shirley. You are too young to know what love is. And you are far too young to undertake the responsibilities of marriage. Besides, you haven't known this young man long enough to make sure you love him.

Don't think of eloping or marrying without your parents' consent. Put sentimentality and love out of your head for the next few years and have jolly times with the young people who have your parents' approval.

A Man to Avoid. Dear Miss Allen: My girl friend and I both like the same young man. We are not really friendly with him, but usually he says "Hello." Sometimes he'll whistle to us.

We like this young man very much and sometimes he seems to feel the same way toward us. We think he would speak to us if we encouraged him. What is your advice? T. A.

Pay no further attention to the young man who treats in such familiar fashion two girls whom he has never met. Above all don't encourage him in further familiarity. Acquaintance begun in this way is cheapening and oftentimes dangerous.

Bridge Club Meets. Miss Carol Howard will entertain her bridge club Wednesday.

A Wife's Confessional by Adele Garrison

Lillian Has Katherine View the Amnesia Victim. "Steady, Marion!" her mother said peremptorily, and I knew that whatever the reason for the young girl's frightened exclamation, she would not be allowed to voice it until we reached home with our troublesome charge. "Is there anything that is necessary to tell me before we reach the farm?"

"No, mother." Her voice was tremulous, but her mother evidently was satisfied with her negative answer. "Then we're ready to start," she said, and stopping only to give my teary-eyed little son a reassuring hug, and to settle him close to me on the seat, I started the car and we resumed our journey to the farm.

More than a little shaken by the terrifying experience resulting from the sudden frenzy of Lillian's mysterious protege, I did not at first get the car to the same speed with which we had traveled. The sedan which had passed us at the moment of Marion's frightened exclamation was now only a speck in the distance, but after half an hour, during which a number of cars, traveling at superior speed, passed us, I noticed, subconsciously at first, and then with quickening interest, that the speck was still at the same relative distance from our car.

A Sedan Is Pursued. Gradually I increased my own speed, and soon found myself creeping up on the sedan, no longer a speck, but easily distinguishable as a car. Without realizing why I was doing it, I kept my eyes upon the rear window of the car against which at intervals of two or three seconds loomed a dark object which I deducted must be the head of one of the occupants.

Speed as I might, however, within the limits to which I rigidly adhere in motoring, I could not overtake the sedan. It maintained the same relative distance in front of us while the miles ticked merrily off on the speedometer and we steadily drew nearer to our destination.

Not until we had passed Southampton did we finally lose sight of the car which had so intrigued my imagination. Whether its occupants had any especial personal interest in us or were simply engaged in the motor game of tantalizing the driver next to the rear, I had no means of knowing. At any rate, when I slowed up at the limits of Southampton, with a wholesome respect for the police regulations of that celebrated social resort, the driver of the sedan shot ahead, turned a corner, and I saw it no more.

I heard Lillian's voice behind me in low-voiced instruction to Marion, and the next minute the young girl had turned and put her lips close to my ear.

"Mother says to whisper your answers," she said. "Do you think Aunt Katherine has gone to the farm yet?"

I took one hand from the wheel and consulted my wrist watch. "I don't think so," I said.

"Then she wants you to drive around to the entrance of the Southampton hospital, and then go in and ask Aunt Katherine to come out. She wants to know if we wouldn't be apt to find Dr. Pettit there also at this time."

"Yes, I am sure his hospital visiting hours are not over."

A Trip to a Hospital. "Then she wants you to ask him to come over to the farm as quickly as he can. She says for you not to be frightened, but she thinks the girl is pretty sick, though not in any immediate danger."

She slid back into her former position again, and I drove to the hospital, parking the car at the curb, and hurrying up the walk without daring a backward glance at the girl, upon whom my face and voice appeared to have so exciting an influence. At the superintendent's office I was informed that Katherine was still in the building but that she was at liberty to go at any minute, her patient having gone home. A hastily scribbled note sent up to her brought her flying down to me.

"Lillian has a sick woman out in the car," I said, "a victim of amnesia whom she picked up on the train coming in from Chicago. She doesn't want to put her here in the hospital, if it isn't dangerous to take her home to the farm. I wish you'd come out and take a look at her."

"I'm all ready to go, anyway," Katherine returned. "I'll just run up and get my things and be with you in a jiffy. You know my training school maxim, though, don't you? 'A good nurse never diagnoses and never prescribes.' However, all rules go by the boards when General Lillian waves her sword."

ALAMITO Is Safe Milk

All Alamito milk is perfectly pasteurized. This merely means that the milk is brought to a temperature of 145 degrees and held there for 30 minutes, then immediately cooled. Nothing is added to the milk—Nothing is taken from it.

Pasteurizing does not affect the taste nor the nourishing qualities of milk, but it does kill any harmful bacteria which the milk might contain.

Many epidemics have been traced to unpasteurized or raw milk—none to perfectly pasteurized milk.

Expensive equipment is necessary to pasteurize milk, yet Alamito milk is selling at a very reasonable price, 12c per quart.

Swift & Company Produce Plant, Nashville, Tenn. Every-Day Service

Butter, eggs, and poultry are every-day items of household purchase. Their story is more than "every-day."

Swift & Company's 1925 Year Book, which has just been issued, tells about our produce plants located in the best farming communities, how we buy cream and produce the best grade of butter, which goes under the Brookfield Brand.

It tells how, in order that nothing may be lost, we use the buttermilk mixed with grain to feed chickens so that they are good enough to carry our famous Premium Milk-Fed Chicken and Golden West Fatted Fowl brands. Eggs also are purchased, carefully candled and graded and the best marketed as Brookfield.

The growth of the produce business from a haphazard, itinerant occupation and its development into a scientific industry are fascinating. The story will be found on page 39 of the Year Book. There are many other interesting stories, also.
