ALCOGRAVURE SECTION

THE OMAHA SUNDAY BEE

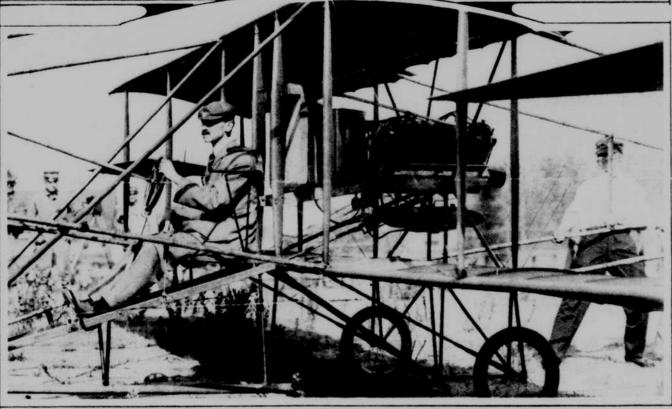

MARCH 8 1925

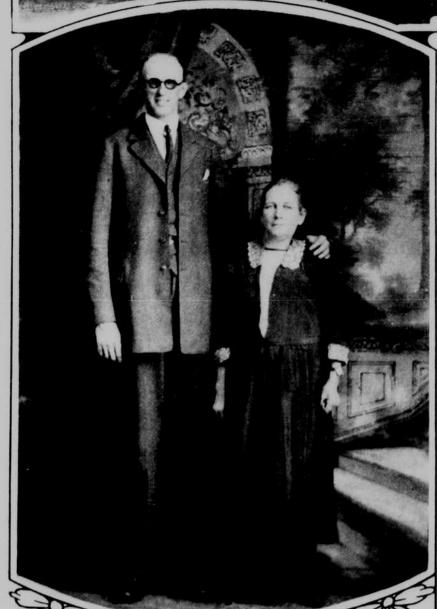

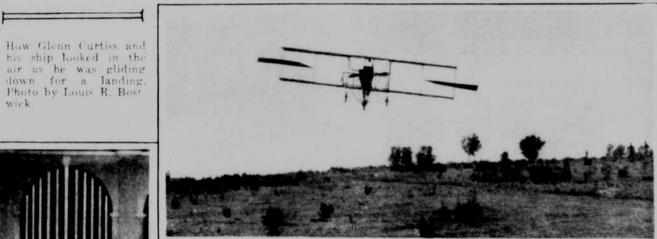

The oldest building in Nebraska. This log cabin was built by the government in September, 1835, for the use of the Rev. Moses Merrill, a Baptist missionary. Samuel Pierce Merrill, the second white child to be born in Nebraska, was born in this house. The first white child born in Nebraska was Maj. Will C. Kennerly, who was born in 1824 in Fort Atkinson, now Fort Calhoun. This log cabin, which is on the Platte river, eight miles southwest of Bellevue, is now used as a chicken house by the farmer on whose land it stands. It has been suggested that the Baptist Missionary society take steps to preserve this historic building. Photo by Louis R. Bostwick.

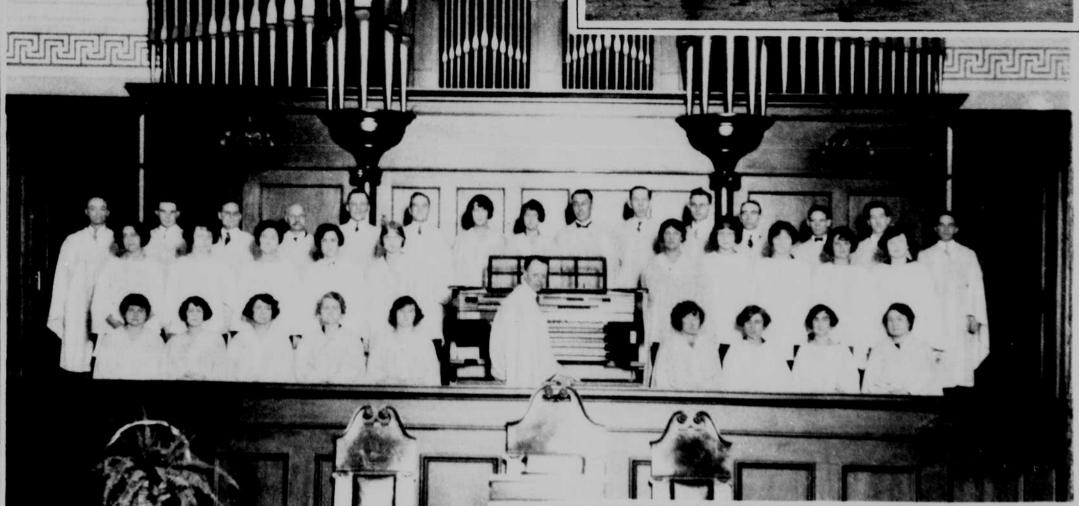

The first airplane that ever flew in Omaha. Glenn Curtiss at the wheel of the machine he brought here for an exhibition flight in 1910. If the air mail fliers now flashing along in the midnight darkness at more than 100 miles an hour had to fly in ships like this one you would probably make better time carrying your letters to Chicago. Photo by Louis R Bostwick

Frances Nash, the Omaha girl who became one of America's foremost pianists, will be the soloist at the last concert of the season by the Omaha Symphony orchestra at the Auditorium Wednesday evening.

Nebraska's tallest man. He is Kalph Madsen of Creighton, Neb. He is 27 years old and is 7 feet, 6 inches high. The photo shows Mr. Madsen and his mother

Chair of the First Baptist church of Omaha Photo by Dewell