Head Morality Play Cast

Kisses Myrtle Roach, Laureine Lichtemberger, Marguerite Ryan

Students of St. John High school will present the modern morality play, "Every Woman," at the Creighton university auditorium, Thursday evening, March 26. Edward C. Roth is director of the drama. Miss Adelaide Fogg has charge of the dancers.

The principal roles of the play are taken by Alice Carville, as Every Woman; Mary McGovern, Nobody; Myrtle Roach, Youth; Marguerite Ryan, Beauty; Laureine Lichtemberger, Modesty; Marguerite Rhine, Conscience, and Patricia Lynch, King Love.

Dear Miss Allen: I met a certain young lady about three weeks ago. She is 23 and I am 22 and I really do love her. The other night she told me she had been married when 18 and divorced three years later, and when divorced she promised her mother she would not marry again for five years. I told her that having been married before didn't make any difference to me and that I loved her so much more for being candid with me. If after six months we still love each other as we do now do you think I would be doing right if I asked her to marry then instead of waiting till her promise had been filled? Would it be all right to ask her mother to let her break her promise? L. Y.

Her mother probably asked her daughter to make this promise because of her extreme youth and wanted her to be certain she chose the right man the next time. Go to her mother and ask her to release her daughter from this promise, and let her talk to both of you.

A. S.: Let him take the initiative. You will gain nothing by asking him the question you suggest and you may lose his friendship. But don't let him take up so much of your time and thoughts.

If I were you I would encourage some other young men friends to call on her and then, even on the nights you've formerly set aside for him. A little competition will do no harm. Besides, you can't in any way count on his proposing marriage to you and it's therefore unwise to allow him to monopolize you.

C. R.: You made no mistake in the stand you took. Petting parties along with a man are always objectionable. Swimming at night with a comparative stranger is also objectionable.

A. L.: But why worry over such a trifle? You surely chose the quickest and most sensible way to cross the muddy place, and if the men you were with did not mind making a seat for you and getting you over, why should you think about it again?

Thank You: Go to your bank and ask for help in budgeting your income.

Hampton: I should say a girl might be considered a young lady at 18.

Costume Too Small; Diets to Fit

Charles Docherty to Wear Monty Tancock's Uniform.

The property man, and in fact all the members of the cast of "The Mole," Mrs. Harry Dooley's play being sponsored by the Omaha Woman's Press club and presented at the Orpheum theater the week of March 23, have been hunting wildly for an English officer's uniform for Charles Docherty, leading man.

Montague Tancock, a former member of the British air service, finally came to the rescue, and offered one of his uniforms. Now the difficulty seems to be that Mr. Docherty is a little portly for the suit. Ever resourceful, however, he has put himself on the established theatrical diet of lamb chops and pineapple, and so strong has been the praise of visiting thespians of the reducing powers of this diet, that Mr. Docherty feels sure that the uniform will be a perfect fit by March 23.

Mrs. Luther Drake will entertain at a dinner at her home, Monday, March 23, in honor of Senator Gilbert Hitchcock, followed by a theater party to see Mr. Hitchcock's daughter's play.
