Butler. Rat Bites a Baby. By ARTHUR BRISBANE

President Coolidge has vetoed the soldiers' bonus bill. Wall street believe that President Coolidge would veto it and is glad it is vetoed, for have cared for myself—Oh! why she annoys Leila only over Wall street doesn't like the idea of should it be Leila who has to suffer?" more taxes. Wall street also has common sense and knows that the veto will cost the president hundreds of thousands of votes. That is why Wall street is betting on Cool- broken speech was a revelation. The last three words may shock gether. There is something I wish the orthodox, but Billy Sunday has to tell you about Bess Dean before a spirit that will get him out of the I go, and this is my only opporhospital and back into the fighting tunity.

Dr. Butler of Columbia university may be a candidate for the republican nomination as governor of New York. He undoubtedly will have to compete with Colonel Hay-ward, with his splendid war record, and his effective work as federal district attorney in New York.

If these two men fight for the nomination it will be interesting, since Dr. Butler is absolutely wet and Colonel Hayward absolutely her. She needs someone of her own

Another infant in its crib has been bitten by a rat. The nation and cities, if they would take the trouble, could combine to wipe out the rat nuisance or keep it down to nothing. Individual househelders taking proper precautions, could protect their own homes.

Failing that, they could scatter around the baby's crib plenty of food containing calories to keep the rat happy, including a little raw

A little north of the White House, where foreign ambassadors dwell, the Church of Jesus, Church of Latter Day Saints, generally known as the Mormon church, will build a church. This republic knows little about the Mormon church, that its great energy and courage conquered the desert, the unknown west and its early hardships, and that the church has abandoned polygamy, which its early fathers thought necessary-perhaps because of the necessity of quickly increasing pop-

It has given up polygamy. The Mormon church has not changed more than some other churches of modern times. Many have given up belief in the devil, once considered a necessary stimulant. Others have given up belief in miracles and others still calling themselves Christians, have given up the idea that the Founder of Christianity was anything more than a mere man like themselves.

Religion sometimes reminds you of the shell of a 7-year-old locust, which looks very much like a locust, although the locust isn't in Germany bows politely to Russia, accepting the inevitable, and suspends the public official that offended Russian dignity. Germany is wise. With the whole of western Europe trying to cut her throat, it would be foolish to pick a quarrel with the big bear on the east.

Two young ladies, otherwise charming, appeared on Atlantic City's boardwalk yesterday, each wearing a diamond bracelet on her ankle. The anklets sparkled, spectators gazed, and the young women were happy. That advertises Atlantic City, gives conversation to otherwise empty minds, and it's better than sticking a piece of bone in your lower lip or cutting scars in your cheek, as some other savage women do. A Tense Moment Between Edith Fair fax and Madge.

Edith Fairfax stared at me, wideeyed, at my answer to her scathing comment upon Bess Dean's treatment of Leila, while her face whitened till I feared she might faint. Then a painful scarlet flush rushed to her cheeks, and her lips parted as if words were coming from them. But for the minute, evidently speech was beyond her, and I spoke quickly, contritely, but with painful awkwardness, for after a flashing of naked sword-blades, such as we had just exchanged, any sort of adjustment was exceedingly difficult, "Forgive me, Edith," I said. "The words came almost without my knowledge, and-I-meant-no-per sonal-application.' She was fighting for control, and after another second or two she achieved it in superb fashion. He slender figure straightened, tensed itself like an arrow waiting to be released from a bow, and her head went up bravely, while her eyes gazed steadily into mine.

"But-there-must-be-one," she said. "It is something I have wanted to say to you a long time, for it has been a weight on my heart. Tell my-folly-never caused any serious 'rift,' as you call it, between you and Dicky, did it?'

There was nothing save sincerity and contrition in her voice and eyes, yet for an instant a mean little suspicion stirred deep within my heart. Had she, perhaps, seized this chance to find out the true state of things between Dicky and me? And was it possible that she would be really glad when she heard the truth
