

Vegetables Are Lower in Price

Canning Season for Berries Is at Height With Reasonable Product Here.

By MARKET BASKET
The time for canning and preserving strawberries is at hand. All housewives who plan to put up berries this year, should purchase them now while they are in abundance and cheap.

This point is stressed strongly by all the Omaha markets. Tennessee, Arkansas and Missouri are the leading berry states on the market, and can be purchased as low as 16 cents to 20 cents a quart. According to the different markets, they have about reached their cheapest point. The next trend in berries is expected to be an advance in price. Missouri berries are the largest and sweetest on display today.

The markets also advise that the canning season for pineapple is now. The price of pineapples has dropped sharply within the last week and they are now selling at 12 1/2 cents each for the large and fancy, or $1.40 a dozen.

Royal Anne cherries, the first of the season, are selling at 50 cents a pound; black cherries range from 35 cents to 40 cents a pound.

The patient housewife will soon be rewarded. Only another week or so will it be necessary to depend on shipped greens. A full line of home-grown vegetables is expected very shortly, in fact, before June 1.

New potatoes have declined in price and those shown are larger in size, selling four pounds for 25 cents. Home-grown mustard greens are selling now for 10 cents a pound. Radishes are in great abundance and cheap. Cucumbers can be had at two for 25 cents; green peppers, two for 15 cents; asparagus, two or three bunches for 25 cents; new home-grown turnips are 5 cents a bunch; leaf lettuce, 5 cents a bunch; scallions are now five bunches for 10 cents; beets, 10 cents a bunch. A little California celery is still seen, but it is high. Texas silver skin onion retail at four pounds for 25 cents. Tomatoes are few as yet and sell for 2 1/2 cents a pound.

For those who long for a cup of coffee but are not permitted to drink it because of resultant nervousness, one market handles Kaffee Hag coffee from which the harmful habit-forming drug called caffeine has been removed. This coffee will not keep anyone awake nor cause nervousness. This same market carries Battle Creek Sanatorium foods.

The bakery departments continue to add new delicacies to their lines of goods. Strawberry marshmallow rolls covered with ground nuts may be purchased at 25 cents each. One bakery department carries a full line of home-made foods, including Farnamade bread, which sells at two and three loaves for 25 cents. For the breakfast, hard rolls can be had for 20 cents a dozen, poppy seed rolls at 20 cents, and Danish coffee cake, filled with figs, equally reasonable.

Eggs have dropped somewhat within the last few weeks. Fancy Pabst roquefort cheese, in pound rolls, were seen at one market for 90 cents. There is little difference in the price of butter, home-churned being featured.

Fresh fish continue in popularity. Lake Erie white fish, excellent when baked, sells at 40 cents a pound. Striped bass, also a lake fish, especially suited for frying, can be had for 35 cents a pound.

Home-made salad dressing is sold at one large market where it is made fresh daily by an electric machine. Mayonnaise and thousand island dressing were on display and attracted many shoppers.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Why Madge Struggled to Win a Laugh From Dicky.

"I hate to have you go, Madge." Lella Durkee's arms released me with reluctance as I kissed her good-bye. I knew that Boss Dean was the back of her mind and that she counted on me to stand between her and the unwelcome machinations of my former school colleague.

"I'll be back soon," I told her significantly. "And in the meantime," playfully, "remember nothing can get you while Edith's around."

"I know it," she returned, smiling fondly at her sister, then added loyally: "Or Alfred, either."

"Of course not," I assented, although I commented that her husband would be a much less efficacious protection from Boss Dean's unwelcome presence than would her sister.

"Goodby, old dear," Dicky's voice held the amused, caressing intonation that always tinged his tone when he speaks to Lella. "Take care of yourself and mind what Edie tells you. She's dying to boss somebody and it might as well be you."

He hummed the last words provokingly, as he turned to Edith.

A Narrow Escape.
"So long, Edie!" he said carelessly, a little bit too carelessly, I said to myself. "I'll probably drop in with mother on our way to Michigan; she'll want to see Mrs. Durkee before Her Fluffiness starts for North Carolina."

"That will be splendid," Edith assented with just the right amount of perfumery cordiality. "I'd love to see your mother. Goodby, Madge. Don't forget to come to see Lella and me while we're housekeeping."

"Never fear," I replied, forcing my voice to gaiety.

"Then we were in the car and moving toward the gate, with the consciousness in my mind at least that the two sisters were still standing on the veranda looking after us. It was driving, with my eyes watching the road, but I knew that Dicky looked back, waving his hat as we turned into the main road and the knowledge did not increase my composure.

"Look out!" Dicky shouted hoarsely, and I averted the car just in time to avoid striking a telegraph pole. "What in time happened?" he demanded. "Here! I'll take the wheel if you're going to do any more stunts like that."

"You'll do nothing of the kind!" I snapped, giving my frayed nerves the relaxation of irritated words. "The car skidded a bit, that's all but I righted it in time."

"I'll Not Speak."
It was a lame excuse, but I could hardly tell him the truth that his last words to Edith Fairfax, with their promise of seeing her soon again and his turning for a last glimpse of her smiling, flushed, happy face, had momentarily robbed me of volition.

"Skidded, my eye! That's a good one!" Dicky jeered. "It skidded about as much as I did. You weren't thinking or paying attention to what you were doing, and you relaxed your grip on the wheel."

"And I'll probably do the same thing again." I retorted spiritfully. "If you don't stop nagging me, I don't criticize you when you're driving, so please be sportmanlike, if you can."

I added the last words for good measure—there was nothing pleasant about my mood and Dicky snorted.

"I'll not speak to you again if you climb every tree on Long Island," he said, slamming himself back against the seat and folding his arms tightly across his chest as if to keep his rebellious speech down by main force.

We drove for half an hour in this ridiculous silence, with my conscience pricking me harder at every mile the speedometer registered.

After all, my common sense told me, there really had been nothing at all in Dicky's demeanor to indicate any more interest in his Edith Fairfax than in any other friend of long standing. His irritation at my swerving of the car was not only natural but justified, my mental inattention went on and my just retort had been unnecessarily hasty.

I shot a furtive look at Dicky from beneath my eyelashes, and something in the uncomfortable rigidity of his pose aroused my sense of the ludicrous, never buried very deep beneath my temper.

"But there are so many trees on Long Island," I murmured dully.

Twenty-six new members were initiated, the work being done by a team from Lincoln. A program followed the banquet presided over by Hon. E. A. Coufal.

Former Mayor Buried.
Denison, Ia., May 23.—Funeral services were held at Schleswig for John Lorenzen, who was mayor of that city for a number of terms. His death resulted from causes which produced sleeping sickness.

Train of 115 Cars Hauled by One Engine
Wymore, Neb., May 23.—The longest train ever handled out of the local railway yards was sent from Wymore to Red Cloud Thursday, one engine hauling 115 empty stock cars to the western part of Nebraska and Kansas for Sunday market loading of livestock. This train eclipsed the record-breaker train sent out last week by 15 cars.

The train yesterday weighed 2,000 tons, covered a total length of 4,950 feet, only stopped three times on the run of 108 miles from Wymore to Red Cloud, and made the trip in seven hours. It was handled by one of the new heavy type engines, and was in charge of Conductor Dobbs and Engineer C. W. Harpster of Wymore.
