Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Why Katie Begged Marge's Aid With Mamie. I had struck the right note with Katie.

"I realized this when she voiced her passionate assertion that she would go to 'prison for a hundred years' rather than have me injured by her foolish action in permitting the girl, Mamie, to hide in our attic the bundles of costly fur cloaks which I had just discovered. It was a note that I had sounded many times before in my dealings with my little maid's difficult temperament, and I quickly resolved to harp upon it now in the emergency that confronted me."

"Your going to prison wouldn't help me any, Katie," I said impressively. "The mere fact that these things are in my house would put me—not you, only—in great danger. You just tell me the whole truth about this, now, and don't leave anything out."

Katie gulped her sobs back, and faced me with something like desperation in her eyes. "I tell you everything," she said slowly, then with a rush of passionate words: "But, oh, I not know why do to poor Katie!"

"Stop that," I said with apparent brutality, for I knew that a few seconds more of self-pity would bring to her an attack of hysteria. She threw up her head as if she had been struck, but she quieted down instantly.

Burgess Bedtime Stories

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

Timmy Discovers His House is Watched. Timmy the Flying Squirrel, like Spooky and Screech Owl, prefers to sleep all day and be abroad after the coming of the Black Shadows.

This night just suited Timmy. It was too fine a night to stay inside. Had he had the least idea that Spooky the Screech Owl was sitting in the top of that very tree and had seen him enter his house, he wouldn't have thought of coming out again for a long time.

Timmy had had a long day. He had been out since dawn, and he had been busy. He had been to the foot of the tree on the trunk of which that little house was fastened. Timmy squeezed a warning. He had seen Spooky swoop after Mrs. Timmy. Just in the nick of time she dodged around the trunk of the tree. Spooky flew up to a branch just above that house. Then it was that Mrs. Timmy knew that Spooky had found out where they lived and was watching that house.

Then He Would Sail to Another Tree. Old Orchard and the Green Meadows play so often. Spooky was trying to do the catching. Every time he missed he would perch near the top of the nearest tree and watch. Timmy, having dodged around the trunk of a tree, would cling there motionless for some time. He never could tell just where Spooky was. As soon as he would climb up as silently as he could until he was high enough to jump. Then he would sail to another tree and the same thing would happen all over.

But after this had happened three or four times Timmy discovered that he was no longer being followed. "I've fooled him," said Timmy to himself. "Now, I must find Mrs. Timmy and warn her that Spooky is hunting in the Old Orchard."

Away he went in a series of wonderful, sailing jumps, and presently he found Mrs. Timmy on the edge
