Brownell Hall Alumnae Meet on Saturday

Oldest School in State—Early Pupil Journeied Four Days in Lumber Wagon to Arrive From Decatur.

Institutions of learning value nothing more than their traditions. Brownell Hall offers, perhaps, more material for the lover of tradition than any school in the state. It is older than even the state university, which was established by act of the legislature in 1869.

Brownell Hall was established September 17, 1863, when Nebraska was still a territory. Bishop Joseph C. Talbot is the man whose name is identified with its beginning, although Bishop Robert Harper Clarkson, who came later, had much to do with its growth and success.

With a period of 61 years behind, alumnae day on Saturday, beginning with luncheon at 1 o'clock at the school, will be an interesting occasion.

Among the oldest of the former students who will attend is Mrs. Harriet MacMurphy who, as Miss Harriet Dakin, was one of the earliest pupils at the school.

Mrs. MacMurphy was a "boarder." She came all the way from Decatur, a journey of four days in a lumber wagon, to arrive at the school. The trip was too long to be taken for one little girl, so she was obliged to wait until it could be combined with an expedition to Omaha for supplies.

Another of the earlier students was Mrs. F. H. Davis, daughter of Bishop Clarkson. Her three daughters, Mrs. Walter Roberts, Mrs. Henry Bohling and Miss Elizabeth Davis are all graduates of the school.

Mrs. John W. Towle and daughters, Mrs. Frederick Bucholz and Miss Marion Towle, are Brownell alumnae.

Mrs. Philip Potter, Mrs. T. L. Ringwalt, Mrs. George C. Smith, Mrs. C. E. Smith and Mrs. George Voss are among the well known Omaha matrons who as girls attended Brownell Hall.

Mrs. Myles Standish, president of the alumnae, who seems to be a popular candidate for re-election, is a niece of John N. H. Patrick, on whose property the present school stands.

Mrs. Glenn Miller is taking reservations for the Saturday luncheon. Commencement for this year's pupils will be on Monday morning, 10:30 o'clock. The baccalaureate sermon will be delivered at Trinity cathedral at 11 o'clock Sunday morning.

Your Problems

By Martha Allen

Which Does She Love?

Dear Martha Allen: I have a problem at heart that is worrying me sick, and am coming to you to help me do the right thing. It is a love affair, but not a petty love affair; it's a serious one.

I have gone with a young man for one year and have learned to love him. We are engaged and planned on getting married in two years. He has become of age and I will be of age in a few months. He loves me, that I know; he worships the ground I walk on. He is true to me and tells me every step he takes.

But, as usual, there is another man of whom I think an awful lot of. My sweetheart knows it and teases me every so often.

This man has had a girl friend, but now they quit. Now that he is free I am doubtful as to which I love best. I have gone with him a few times before my sweetheart came and I liked his company, and I know he likes me, because he has asked to take me to places. That was my mistake; I should have gone then, but I thought I loved my sweetheart better. I have been true to my sweetheart and have never gone with any man during the time I went with him.

What I want is to find out in some manner which is the man for me without hurting my sweetheart's feelings. He claims he could not live without me and that if I should leave him he'd go to the place where he couldn't feel his heart ache. Please answer me. SICK AT HEART.

There is no sign or token by which one can tell you which man you like best. That can come only from your own mind and heart. No one can decide for you. It is not an easy decision to make. You should try to make it with courage, fairness and firmness.

Dear Miss Allen: I am a girl in my early teens and I am hot out of school. I wear my hair in a braid, but I don't like it that way, and I can't find another way for a school girl. Please find a way for a school girl. Does rouge wrinkle the face? Please answer me. M. E. B.

Bobbed hair is a popular style for young girls and becoming to most of them. Rouge does not wrinkle the skin, but a young girl is foolish to use it, for it detracts from her natural beauty.

For the Gutmans.

Miss Peggy Reed will be a dinner host Saturday evening honoring Mr. and Mrs. Richard Guttman of Vienna.

"My Husband's Love"

Why Katherine Worried About Mad's Trip With Mamie.

"But, Madge," Katherine expostulated, when I had finished telling her of the fur cloaks that Katie, at Mamie's behest, had hidden in our attic unknown to me until her confession, I science had prompted confession. "I don't see how you dare drive to New York alone with that girl! She looks sullen and desperate enough for anything. How do you know that in some lonely part of the road she won't hit you over the head?"

"Because she's too afraid of my reporting her possession of those coats to the police," I answered with more confidence than I really felt. "She bluffed just as long as she could, but she was very much frightened when she thought I was calling the chief of police."

"But she's had time to think things over since," Katherine argued, "and while I don't want to frighten you, yet she certainly looks to me as if she were plotting something behind that stolid face of hers. I wish you'd turn the cloaks over to the police here and be done with the thing."

"Think a minute, and you'll see why I can't do that," I said, and she looked at me comprehendingly.

"Yes, I see," she said. "You don't want to be mixed up with the thing out here in this 'small town' atmosphere."

"Exactly," I admitted. "And then besides—"

I stopped short, and Katherine looked at me inquiringly.

"You see," I explained lamely. "I'm not so sure that those cloaks were stolen, after all."

"Exactly," Katherine retorted incredulously, but careful as I was to keep her voice below Mamie's hearing. "Why! what other answer can there be? No girl like Mamie could have any other reason for possessing that many coats of the value you say they have?"

"I know," I returned, regretting my admission, for I had said no word to Katherine of Mollie Fawcett, and my belief in her rectitude. "It was simply a foolish bunch of mine, but it makes me doubly anxious to get the cloaks to New York and Lillian, especially as she already has an investigating eye upon the Marks family."

"But Me No Buts."

"Yes, Lillian will be able to straighten things out if anyone can," Katherine said, "if—you reach her truly, I'm fearfully worried about your going alone with that girl. I don't see how you can get to go along with you?"

"Not one," I returned a bit slowly for Katherine's reiteration of possible danger was beginning to get on my nerves.

"I know I'm being officious," she said, yet with no pique in her tone at the annoyance I had betrayed "but you can't offend me by getting cross. I'm going to nag right along this line. What's the matter with Jim?"

"Nothing," I returned with a shrug little smile, "except that if Jim went away, Jerry Ticer would have to come over to do the farm chores, and with his curiosity and Katie's garrulity, I might just as well publish my errand in the village newspaper."

"Yes, I suppose you're right," she admitted reluctantly. "But—"

"But me no buts," I quoted with sudden forced gaiety. "I'll manage somehow, never fear, if I have to drive with one hand while I hold Mamie at arm's length with the other. But—I don't want to talk any more about it."

"All right," her acquiescence was as ready and cheerful as if she were in perfect agreement with me instead of thoroughly disapproving of my course.

A Significant Question.

I could not so easily rid myself of her unspoken objections, however, I knew that she was thinking, and the knowledge made me uncomfortable all through my hurried preparations for the journey to New York which I had made with one eye watchfully fixed on Mamie.

I had planned to time my journey so that I would arrive in New York about 9 o'clock, when the amusement-seeking crowds were all settled in their various theaters and dancehalls. I meant to drive slowly, because I knew that I would have to watch Mamie continually, even though I would not admit to myself that I took Katherine's fears seriously.

She said nothing more until, Jim having returned from the garage where I had sent him to stock the car with gas, oil and water, and to have the tires tested, I picked up the heavy suitcases containing the furs, and started for the car with them. Taking one from my hand and lowering her voice to a whisper, so that Mamie stalking in front of us, might not hear, she said tensely.

"Madge! Haven't you anything with you which you can frighten that girl if she gets unruly?"

29 years after the Gold Rush came Hills Bros Red Can Coffee

A GENERATION following the storied stampede of the Forty-niners (in 1878, to be exact) another event of importance took place in the West—the birth of Hills Bros. Red Can Coffee. The coffee-pot became a serious contender for the laurels of the prospector's pan.

In all truth, the lure of the lode, though more spectacular, has not eclipsed the charm of the golden cup of Hills Bros. Red Can Coffee—the largest-selling brand in the world, known everywhere as The Recognized Standard.

Break the vacuum seal of a tin of "Red Can"; inhale that aroma! Brew a cup and lift it to your lips! Then you will understand the popularity of this really wonderful coffee, and know that the coffee tradition of the West is in safe keeping. The rare flavor is sealed fresh for you.

With all its high quality, Hills Bros. Coffee is not high-priced. It is economical to buy—and economical to use. Hills Bros., San Francisco.
