Well, It's Coolidge
The Platform Is Done.
Here, It's Boiled Down.
It Won't Frighten You.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

Mr. Coolidge is nominated to succeed himself. The convention cheered for 20 minutes, a long cheer. The hand helped as usual. You should know, when you read this, who is to be vice president.

As this is written, Senator Kenyon, ex-Governor Lowden and Congressman Sanders of Indiana have been put in nomination. Loud applause for Sanders. He is supposed to be the Coolidge dark horse.

The republican platform, only six columns long, will be read through by 10,000,000 out of 100,000,000 persons perhaps.

The republicans lead their ace, reminding voters that in 1921, when republicans followed democrats in power, there were 4,500,000 men unemployed in the United States. Moral: If you want to be out of a job vote for a democrat.

Next comes economy, money savins. Thanks to Secretary Mellon, the republicans have something to brag about there.

There is justified crowing about "finance" and "taxation." Again Mellon, not the republican party, deserves the credit.

One thousand, two hundred and fifty millions a year have been cut off the nation's taxation. That will please the prosperous. The national debt has been reduced $2,500,000,000. That pleases everybody.

Under "foreign relations" unnecessary words are used to say that the republicans propose to mix the country in the world court. We are to join, yet without getting quite in it. We are to urge cutting down land armies, use of submarines and poison gas. Meanwhile, fortunately, our chemists are studying poison gas carefully. If we have any sense we shall build many submarines. This country, more than any other, needs submarines.

Under "foreign debts" the republicans brag a little about the English arranging to pay what they owe us. England deserves credit there, not the republicans.

The tariff is praised, boomed, promoted and endorsed, as it ought to be. This country can't continue prosperous and compete with China or Europe, whether in labor, finance, manufacturers or anything else, except perhaps automobile building. We seem to understand that.

The farmer gets many kind words, but little solid nourishment. The republicans promise "to place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industry to assure its prosperity and success." That might sound all right, set to music, but it doesn't mean much.

The republicans don't say: "We promise to do for you farmers what we do for the railroads. Whenever you need any more money we will give it to you, and by special legislation we shall force the public to pay high enough price to guarantee you a good return on your investment and your work."

Under "labor" the platform says nothing, in a few hundred words. Under "world war veterans" the poor republicans can't brag about giving the soldiers the bonus, although a republican-congress did it—because of the fact a republican president vetoed it.

Under "conservation" the republicans say they believe in "effective, efficient conservation, whether of oil, timber, coal or water power." It must have taken some courage to write in that word "oil."

In the paragraph about "universal mobilization in war-time," the government is careful not to say "if another war comes we shall begin conscripting money on the day we conscript the first soldier."

There is a big "if" paragraph on the Philippines. If they are fit for it, and if they want it, and if the time comes, then the Philippines shall be free.

In the paragraph about reclamation, generalizing or irrigating arid and semi-arid lands nothing definite is promised. Nothing, for instance, about the thing that ought to be done now—utilization of the power and water of the Colorado river.

Only four lines are devoted to commercial aviation, the most important thing in our national defense. Our protection in war will depend upon the number of trained flying men and flying machines.

There is an old-fashioned, very mild paragraph about "the negro." And there are two solemn paragraphs about "law and order," beginning "we must have respect for law." But there isn't a word about the Ku Klux Klan. Having heard from Indiana, Ohio, and some other places, the republicans decide to skate around that hole in the political ice.

Women delegates are congratulated. The republican party says to them, "Come and sit on mama's lap. It doesn't quite know what to say after that. It ought to say "We wish we had more women in politics, for women are more honest than men. And the kind of politics we are having now, needs honesty more than anything else."

The republican party affirms "unyielding devotion to the constitution," adds a few lines on party responsibility, pointing out, of course, that the one responsible party is the republican party, and that's all.

There isn't anything in that platform to frighten anybody, nothing to cause excitement, nothing to indicate that anybody in power in the republican party believes that there have been important changes in the world since 1914.

Luxury Tax Cut to Aid Consumer

New Revenue Act Lowers Cost of Jewelry, Candy, Automobiles.

The amended revenue act which goes into effect July 3 will benefit to consumers, for it will relieve special taxes on theater tickets, beverages, jewelry, candy, automobiles and telephone and telegraph messages.

The federal tax is removed on telephone tolls, which was 15 cents on messages exceeding 30 cents. Tax on telephone messages, which was 5 cents on charges between 15 and 50 cents, and 10 cents on messages more than 50 cents, is removed.

The tax paid by candy makers has been reduced from 5 per cent to 2 1/2 per cent. No tax will be charged on an auto truck or chassis sold for not over $1,000, or truck or body sold for an amount in excess of the exempt price.

Theater owners are relieved of special taxes dependent on seating capacity. Theaters will not be charged a tax on admissions of 50 cents or less. The tax remains 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction if the price is over 50 cents.

WIFE TOOK CHILD; MARRIED ANOTHER

A little more than a year of married life sufficed Mollie Flanck, her husband, David, 4520 South Twenty-fifth street, testified in domestic relations court, where he was granted a divorce Friday.

They were wedded in 1912 and the next year she went with their infant child for a visit with her parents in Europe.

"I sent her money and wrote her to come back," he testified. "The war broke out and again I wrote begging her to come and sent her money. Later came a letter from my brother, telling me she had gone to Germany and had married another man. I don't know where she and my child are now."

Hail Damages Gardens.
David City, Neb., June 13.—Strong wind and hail that accompanied the Thursday rain here played havoc with small garden truck and slightly damaged some field crops.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Injunction With Which Katherine Sent Madge on Her Way.

Katherine's query concerning my preparedness to intimidate Mamie if she should prove obstreperous started me into a shame-faced confession.

"I had that little silencer revolver which Lillian gave me," I whispered, and then flushed scarlet at the absurdity of the confession.

But Katherine evidently saw nothing odd in my statement.

"I'm so relieved," she whispered back. "I was afraid you might be some means of bringing the young woman to terms if she turned ugly. There'll be no danger after you get into the suburbs for she won't court attracting any attention to herself."

But along the lonely stretches of road you'd better drive with only one hand on the wheel.

"There'll be no danger anywhere," I asserted stoutly. "I'm not taking the thing on account of Mamie, but because."

"Of the possibility of bootleggers on the road," Katherine finished with a smile that was distinctly provoking, although I think she did not mean to tease.

"Well, you may need it in that direction at that. But goodbye, dear girl, and telephone me as soon as you possibly can after you get in. And when you think I'm fussy and old-womanish—just remember you have—never mind—I don't mean anything. Good hunting!"

Mamie Is Huling.
She kissed me warmly, and helped me put the suitcases with the furs in the tonneau.

Mamie watched the proceedings.

"Where do you want me to sit?" she asked with apparent meekness.

"In the back?"
"No," I responded promptly. "Right here in front with me."

"Suppose the doors come open, with nobody back there. Won't the suitcase fall out?"
Unconsciously, she had given me the cue I wished.

"The doors won't come open," I returned with assurance. "But to make doubly sure, I'll have you sit in such a position that you can catch them. Come up here and I'll show you what I wish."

I was in the seat behind the wheel at this time, and I caught an approving, comprehending glance from Katherine, as Mamie sullenly mounted to the seat beside me.

Madge Has a Premonition.
I put my hands on her shoulders and turned her body so that she back was toward me and her side toward the back of the car.

"Now," I said cheerily, "you can watch the suitcases every step of the way—and you can't turn around toward me without my knowing it."

I added the last part of the sentence silently, but I think Mamie understood it, for she said wittily, "I'll get all cramped sitting this way."

"No, for I shall let you get out and walk around when you get tired."

"But I do not wish you to talk any more. When you get too tired sitting that way, you may ask me to change, but you must say nothing else."

I bent to my key and started the engine, then waved as cheery a farewell to Katherine as I could manage.

Purposely I had managed things so that Marion and Jim were out in the pasture with Jim getting the cows in. I did not want the risk of the tears, which my little lad sometimes sheds when he sees me going away even for a brief absence.

fears of Mamie proving dangerous were the quintessence of absurdity, yet I could not shake off a little premonition that the sullen girl beside me would make the coming hours in her company unpleasantly memorable for me, although as yet she had made no sign of rebellion.

POTATO FREIGHT RATES REDUCED

Crofton, Neb., June 13.—An important decision made recently by the state railway commission and which becomes effective June 23, makes it possible for potato growers in western Nebraska to ship their potatoes from points west of Norfolk on the Northwestern railroad to points in northeast Nebraska north of Norfolk on the winner branch and north of Wayne, Wakefield and Coburn on the branches of the M. & O. railroad at a freight rate reduction of 15 to 20 per cent on carload lots.

About 35 towns will be benefited by these new rates and potato growers in western Nebraska who have been seeking this reduction for some time will be helped greatly by this change.

Formerly these two railroads charged higher rates than were charged for similar shipments over one road and as these two roads are considered as under one control in establishing rates the commission agreed with the farmers that the excessive rates were unfair.
