

Former Head of Kilpatrick's Dies; Was Ill 2 Months

Robert Cowell, 67, Succumbs After Long Struggle—Retired From Business in 1919.

Robert Cowell, 67, former president of the Thomas Kilpatrick & Son company, died at 8 a. m. Friday at his home, 132 North Thirty-ninth street, after an illness which had lasted for two months.

Mr. Cowell retired from the Kilpatrick company in 1919. In January of 1920 the family took a two-year trip abroad, covering most of the countries in the world.

Mr. Cowell had never been sick before, according to the family.

Born in Isle of Man.
Mr. Cowell was born in the Isle of Man, and was apprenticed at an early age in the retail business. He came to the United States in 1879 and entered the Taylor-Kilpatrick company in Cleveland in a minor capacity.

When he left Cleveland in 1884 Mr. Cowell was general manager of the store. He came with Mr. Kilpatrick to Chicago, where he spent two years in the James H. Walker company.

Came Here in 1887.
Again with Mr. Kilpatrick, he came to Omaha in 1887 and helped organize the wholesale concern of Kilpatrick-Koch company, which was later succeeded by the Thomas Kilpatrick company.

When Mr. Kilpatrick died in 1916, Mr. Cowell became the president of the store which had also taken over the N. B. Falconer establishment. He retired in 1919.

Mr. Cowell was a prominent figure in Omaha business and social life. He was a member of the Omaha club, University club, Chamber of Commerce, Happy Hollow, the Elks, St. Barnabas church, and was a trustee in the University of Omaha.

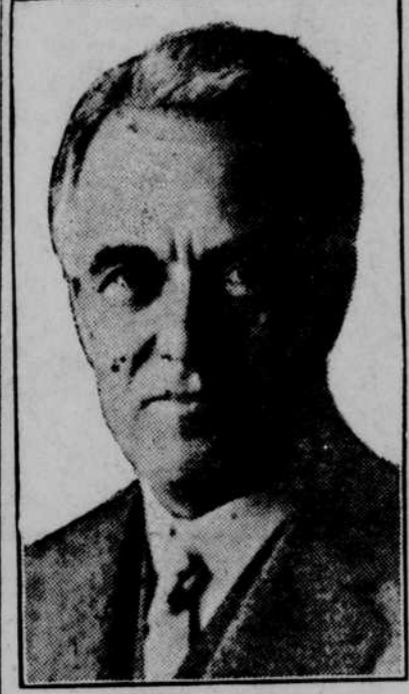

Police Commissioner.
His friends who knew him for a long time say that his chief characteristic was his modesty. He was a great worker in all civic movements, but kept out of the limelight.

Mr. Cowell served as police commissioner for three years. He was strongly urged at one time to run for mayor of Omaha, but would not. He was elected to the railway commission, but resigned.

He is survived by his widow and one daughter, Mona. Although he had been sick for two months, it was not thought that it was serious, and a trip to the Isle of Man, where he was born, was being planned for the near future.

Mr. Cowell was a great reader, a deep thinker and an extensive traveler. The year after his retirement the family toured the world, being gone for two years.

Lawyers Blocking Local Rum Cases, Samardick Asserts

Delaying Trials, Hoping to Further Congest Federal Docket—125 Defendants Demand Juries.

Prohibition Agent Robert Samardick declared Friday morning that he believed a ring of attorneys was deliberately holding up and delaying procedure of liquor cases in federal court. Samardick declared that by needless lengthy examinations and arguments the lawyers hoped to retard court action so that when Judge McGee leaves the bench here he will have some cases untried.

Judge McGee declared Friday morning that he will hold court on Saturdays to expedite trial of the large number of liquor cases pending. Court Saturday will convene at 9 a. m. and adjourn at 6 p. m.

One hundred twenty-five men and women were arraigned for bootlegging Friday, but no one pleaded guilty. All demanded jury trials.

Case of Vernon McManigal and Cornelius Bailey, forty-eighth and Redick avenue, was up in federal court Friday morning. The pair is charged with unlawful possession of a still, mash and liquor for sale.

Judge Woodrough may come to the assistance of Judge McGee and take off of his hands all narcotic cases.
