Science Determines Hour for Party at Lincoln

To Dance in Awninged Patio on the Stroke of Nine, Just as Fascinating Venus Sheds Her Beams Over the Stately Poplar.

Fully as important for those who make it a trip to Africa for a five-minute observation of an eclipse of the sun, will be the excursion to Lincoln Saturday, by 10 of Omaha's social set to see the moon rise over a tall poplar which stands sentinel in the terraced gardens of the Bert Faulkner home.

The aid of science was called upon when invitations for the affair were issued, for it is to be strictly a moonlight affair, starting at 9, exactly the moment when Venus is at her most brilliant self, is scheduled to rise into view back of the stately tree.

Italian torches will reflect multi-colored beams through the shrubbery surrounding the terrace, lending their mellow grace to the formal Italian setting of the Faulkner home. But on the tiled floor, where the guests will dance, only the moon will shine.

The Esplanade orchestra will play in a gaily awninged patio and nearby, colored waters will splash merrily in a tiny pool.

Part of the group will stay at the Faulkners during their visit, others will enter Mrs. R. C. Hoyt's division at 8 o'clock, Mrs. George De Lacy, Dr. and Mrs. Clyde Roeder, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Reasoner, Mr. and Mrs. Naasson Young and Mr. and Mrs. George Seaman.

Knitted Silk Ties. With the knitting machines improved as they are it is not surprising that so many designs of silk knitted ties are on display. The color combinations seem to be an improvement over previous years and the ties look as if they would stand up and give good wear.

Your Problems
Martha Allen
He is a "Nagger."

Dear Miss Allen: I am 22 and am considered good looking. Last winter I became engaged to a man nine years my senior. He seems to think every thing in the world of me, and I do of him, except that he is always finding fault with me. He asks me not to say some things, like slang. He says I don't pay enough attention to him. Do you think he will get worse? Is he just sensitive? TROUBLED.

He wants to be proud of you, no doubt. Evidently he wishes you to use good language, and for that I like him. But he does wrong in "nagging" you about your faults. I believe you can correct those we love without hurting their feelings if we have the kindly attitude and await the right moment. But constant fault finding is a bad habit and it usually doesn't get any better as time goes on.

Dear Martha Allen: I am in love with a boy 10 years older than myself. We haven't seen each other for two years. He doesn't have any vacation in the summer, but I have two weeks. And he wants me to come and see him if he pays my railroad fare. Would it be all right for me to go? I am 20. My mother thinks it would be wrong, but I want to see him. HEARTBROKEN.

Are you engaged to this man? If not, I think you'd better see to mother and not go. Your mother knows more about this affair than I do, so my advice to you is to listen to her. Are you quite sure this man can't manage to make a trip to see you in the future? Enlightened: Your wrong doing is for you to answer for to your God, and not to any other man. You will make a grave mistake if you feel it necessary to drag this man through your experience with another. You have learned from your mistake. You have become a stronger and finer woman. He may be a man of that "strengthened" character in you. He might not understand your attempt to explain. You can explain for your wrong only by what you do in the future. If you are loyal and kind and true and noble in all your future life with this man you love, you will owe him nothing further.

The convention opens June 29 and ends July 5. After the meeting there is to be a boat party at Bar Harbor, Me., at the Claremont hotel.

Going from Nebraska, the active chapter at Lincoln, will be Helen Guthrie of Central City, the official delegate; Esther Swanson of Sargent, Millicent Jaekle of Pawnee City, Laura Whipple of Fremont and Margaret Daly, Charlotte Kizer and Mabel Holman of Lincoln.

Daughter of Colonel E. R. Schriener to Wed.

Col. E. R. Schriener of the medical corps, announces the engagement of his daughter, Miss Lois, to Lieut. Corland Brown of the air service. The wedding will take place in the late summer.

Miss Louise Brown arrived Thursday from St. Louis where she has been teaching in the high school, and is with her sister, Mrs. Carroll R. Belden, and Mr. Belden, Miss Brown's sister, Miss Mary Brown, who has been teaching at Portland, Ore., arrived recently and is at the Belden home where her marriage to Dr. De Witt T. Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Why Did the Leader Swiftly Change Front?

As the truck, carrying me with it, appeared to leave the floor of the elevator and rise slowly into the air, I wondered for an instant if my whole adventure were but a fantastic nightmare.

Then I remembered things I had read concerning the big secret elevators in the rear rooms of some garages by which stolen cars and bootlegged trucks could be lifted beyond the reach of ordinary espionage, and I realized that I must be on one of the ingenious contrivances.

The rising movement stopped, there was a slight, hardly discernible sound as of sliding doors, which I deduced must be well oiled, and the truck rolled forward a few feet and stopped.

"All right!" sounded the gruff voice of the leader. "That will do for you now. Beat it! I'll call you."

"What about the dance?" ventured one man, more daring than the rest. "Has your hearing gone back on you?" sulkily inquired the leader and there was no further questioning, only the sound of hastily retreating footsteps.

A door closed some distance away, and as if he had waited for the sound, the leader began to tug at the boxes that shielded me from view.

When he had made an opening barely large enough to admit my body, he called sulkily:

"Come out of there now."

It was not a very dignified performance that followed, and I was thankful, indeed, as I crawled through the opening on all fours, that the man had gone around to the front of the truck, evidently on a tour of inspection—I could not hope that he had possessed the delicacy deliberately to refrain from watching me.

I dropped to the floor in an ignominious heap, but was up again in had none of the qualities requisite to be a real leader of men, had more than his share of petty vanity. This evidently was out to the quick by the intimation that his threats and actions had not the proper weight behind them.

"Joke, is it?" he snarled, turning a venomous look upon me. "You'll think it's a sorry joke, my girl, before I'm through with you. I didn't know back on the road but what you had something real to hand out, the promise of a nice little wad of kale

which, for instance, you'd have brought to us before we turned you loose. But this line of talk won't get you nothin' but a bash over the head,

and I've a mind to give—"

I had retreated from him as he spoke, but now he was advancing to shudder with difficulty. There was something feline, cruel, in the coldly

quizzical tone, and I felt a sudden reminiscent sympathy for the struggles of a mouse I once had seen beneath the paws of a cat.

I must not betray my weakness,

however. The thought was like a slogan, serving me to a coolly detached air and casual speech.

"Not particularly," I replied nonchalantly. "But that is neither here nor there. I am interested in having

you make clear just how you expect to explain the consequences to yourself which surely will follow this little joke."

The moment my lips uttered the last word, I saw that I had made a mistake. The man, who patently

"What's he coming up here for?"

he whispered, half to himself. "Nobody else would dare—"

He looked at me doubtfully, then beckoned me peremptorily.

"Crawl back in here," he said, indication of the truck, "and don't you

open your face if you don't want it

lashed in."

I moved toward him as if to obey

him, and then with a swift bound I placed the truck between myself and

him while I sent scream after scream

into the air.
