Affairs for European Tourists Fill the Social Calendar

Society is interested in affairs for departing travelers to foreign shores this week and next.

Wednesday Mrs. P. P. Kirkendall entertained at luncheon and bridge for Mrs. John A. McShane, who leaves early in July with the Fred Davises for a European tour. Mrs. Howard Baldrige, who is to make her home in Omaha for the summer, shared honors.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. George Brandels were hosts at a garden dinner given for Mrs. Margaret Haynes and Mrs. Nelson Updike, who leave in July with their sons for a summer abroad.

Affairs for Mrs. Ben Wood and Miss Elizabeth Davis include a Fourth of July party given by the Henry Boblings, and dinners given this week by the J. E. Megeaths and the C. Louis Meyers.

Hogs planning gaieties for Dr. and Mrs. R. Mills Silby have been asked to postpone them until later, for the Silbys have cancelled their passage to England on July 10 and will go in the fall.

Farewell parties for Miss Mary Munchhoff have been postponed, to be welcome home affairs, for Miss Munchhoff plans to continue her vocal classes until the first week in July, when she will leave for Germany.

Walter W. Head, who will visit his daughter, Mrs. Raymond Bauer, in Paris, is himself to be a host on July 4 at Wilderhill, his country place near St. Joseph, Mo. Mr. Head's guests will include Mr. and Mrs. Ross Towle, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Peters, Dr. and Mrs. Clyde Roeder, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dooley, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Roberts and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Clarke.

To Sigma Kappa Meet

Miss Helen Guthrie, niece of Mrs. W. R. Sage, was her guest Wednesday en route to Colby college, Waterville, Me., where she will attend the Sigma Kappa sorority, 50th anniversary. Miss Guthrie is well known in Nebraska and has taken a prominent part in University of Nebraska activities. She is a member of two honorary societies, Black Masque and Silver Serpent, and in her freshman year was selected as attendant to the May Queen.

Engagement.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis E. Mann of Brighton, Neb., announce the engagement of their daughter, Lula Margaret, to Thomas Delbert Jones of Omaha. Miss Mann attended Iowa state college and is a graduate of the University of Nebraska. She is a member of the Sigma Kappa sorority. Mr. Jones is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and is a member of the Aocacia fraternity. The wedding will take place in the early fall.

Rag Rugs Exhibited.

An exhibit of rag rugs made by girls of the Christ Child settlement will be shown Thursday at Burgess-Nash store. Mrs. A. V. Kinsler is chairman of judges for the rugs. Following the exhibit, a party will be given at the settlement.

Open Mite Box.

The Woman's Organization of Pearl Memorial church will hold a meeting at the church on Thursday, June 26. Luncheon will be served at 1:15 followed by a meeting at 1:30. Business of importance to every member. Opening of the Foreign Missionary society mite box.

Dorothy Higgins' Guest.

Miss Dorothy Higgins will entertain at a tea on Wednesday, July 2, and a buffet supper on the next day for her house guest, Miss Betty Stewart of New York. Miss Jane Stewart will entertain at a dinner Wednesday, July 3, at the Country club for this guest.

The glorious West loves her glorious coffee

WHEN the coffee-critical West adopts one certain brand as her very own, what more need be said? Hills Bros. Red Can Coffee outsells all other brands of coffee, and is, beyond question, The Recognized Standard.

Break the vacuum seal and inhale "Red Can." What a fragrance! Brew a cup and lift it to your lips. Now you understand the tremendous popularity of this truly wonderful coffee. It is further good to know that such marvelous flavor is sealed fresh in vacuum "for keeps."

With all its high quality, Hills Bros. Coffee is not high-priced. It is economical to buy—and economical to use. Hills Bros., San Francisco.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The "Results" Harry Underwood Got About the Furs.

"No, the suitcases are not locked," I answered, with a sudden quick apprehension that something had happened to the valuable fur cloaks that the girl, Mamie, had induced Katie to secret in the farmhouse attic, and which I wished to get to Lillian in New York, for her decision as to the best course to pursue concerning them. My uneasiness was not lessened by a curious little gleam in Mamie's eyes as she furtively watched my face.

"Then undo those straps, pronto," Harry Underwood commanded, and the man whom he had called Ed obeyed him with alacrity and threw open the suitcases, disclosed the fact that both were empty. I saw genuine astonishment in Ed's face, but Mamie's face showed clearly that she wasn't surprised.

Harry Underwood's keen eyes swept both faces, and I was sure, saw the true state of things. I turned to me with a request which I knew was a command.

"Will you please stay here until I return?" he asked, and then, spoke abruptly to the man kneeling beside the suitcases:

"Bring that girl into the office, Ed," he said, and strode into the front of the garage without another look or word. As the door closed behind him, Ed turned upon Mamie wrathfully:

"Now you have done it," he said venomously. "I'd rather have the devil after me than the Big Tangierine. Now you get this into that thick head of yours: If you know where the things are that were in there, you get busy and dig 'em out, or he won't leave enough of you to fill a sandwhich."

With his hand on the girl's arm as he was pushing her toward the door as he spoke, and I think something of his alarm pierced the girl's stolidity, for she twisted in his grasp so that her face was toward me and murmured an appealing:

"Oh! Missie Graham! Please!"

I knew better, however, than to interfere with Harry Underwood's management of the sorry affair, and I made my face and voice severely non-committal as I said coldly:

"I am sorry, Mamie, but I cannot help you now. It is too late. Tell Mr. Underwood the truth and help him to find the packages that were in the suitcases. Then I will do what I can for you."

Ed gave her no opportunity to reply if she had wished. The door shut with a slam behind them, and then there came to my ears the sound of low-voiced, but fierce altercation, mingled with tearful sobbing-exposition from Mamie. Then there was a guttural outburst from some one, and Harry Underwood's voice, grim, deadly:

"You will, will you?" followed by a sound which called up memories of the "dull thud" so beloved of the old-time romancers. I held my breath wondering which of the men outside had been knocked to the floor, and regained it only when I again heard Mr. Underwood's voice, this time crisp with command:

"All right. Bring those bundles back with me, and head the cars toward New York. Start the engines."

It was but a second or two afterward that Mr. Underwood stalked into the rear room with Mamie at his heels and his arms filled with the bundles which I had put into the suitcases. He closed the door behind him and laid the bundles upon the running board of the nearest car.

"Will you see if everything is there?" he asked. "And hurry as fast as you can."

The bundles looked exactly as I had tied them, but I tore each open a little way with an experimental forefinger, and satisfied myself that they had not been disturbed.

"Everything accounted for," I said, looking up at him.

"Good!" he returned. "Here, you, Mamie, help us get these back into the suitcases."

She sprang to assist him with the submission of a beaten dog, and I noticed her eyes following him humbly and with distinct admiration as he fastened the straps of the suitcases, handed one to her, took one himself and put a hand on my arm as he signaled her to open the door.

The garage outside was deserted, but in the office I saw the heads of several men bent over something on the table. As I looked they stepped back and there came into view the head and shoulders of a man struggling up from the table. Blood was running down his face, and his arms were waving feebly. It was the man who had been the leader of the gang, the one who had threatened me with death.

Pete sat in my car, and Ed stood beside the glistening maroon roadster luxuriously upholstered, into which Mr. Underwood ushered me with as much embarrassment as if he were starting for a social function. Then he swung the suitcases into my car, motioned Mamie to get in beside Pete, and turned to Ed:

"I'm leaving everything to you, Ed," he said, with a manner which I saw made a willing slave of the younger man. "Better snake that grizzly in there to a hospital, and tell him to keep his mouth shut if he knows what's good for him."

Here are the switchboard operators who handled thousands of calls following the storm.

THANKS FOR YOUR PATIENCE!

We all know the result of the two severe storms which swept our city Sunday and Monday nights, causing a property loss of many thousands of dollars.

The wind, in its terrific maddening frenzy, uprooted trees, tore away huge branches, pitching them about; crashing many electric light wires and poles to the ground.

Even as the storm raged, our linemen and repair men hurried from their comfortable homes to speed up the work of bringing order out of chaos. Truckloads of wires, cable and other equipment followed closely in their paths.

Employees from various departments hurried to the Electric Building to aid the regular telephone operators in handling the large number of "trouble calls." Dangerous wires must, of course, be given immediate attention in order to protect human life. Then all other repairs are made just as quickly as is humanly possible.

You have been patient and your patience has aided greatly in speeding up the repair work. It has been a great factor in keeping up the morale of our employes who will remain by their posts until the work is done.

Our service men appreciate your patience—and so do we.

WARNING
You are endangering your life if you touch or come in contact in any way with electric wires. If you see any loose wires, call the Nebraska Power Company, A. T. 3100, and they will be removed by our linemen.
