Omahans in Norway Make Own 4th of July Celebration

Kvenild Boys Buy Cap Pistols to Give Norwegians Nolsy Party.

Letters from Omahans abroad tell of the preparations they are making to spend the glorious Fourth gloriously.

John Kvenild, 13, and his brother, Bobby, 4, faced tragedy when they learned that their father, B. Kvenild, could not send them firecrackers from Omaha through the mail, for they are in Froyen, Norway, for the summer with their mother.

When the news came, Mrs. Kvenild hurried them into a motor to Christiania, where they made a store to store canvases of the city, and succeeded in finding toy pistols with which they will make merry. They have issued invitations for a Fourth of July party to their Norwegian relatives and friends, to show them how noisily it is celebrated in America.

The Fourth is a day of celebration that is all but lost to Americans, who have made their permanent homes in foreign countries, even though there has been more recognition of America's national holiday since the world war. In Paris, where Mrs. Raymond Baur (nee Vernelle Head) now lives, the day is quietly observed. The American ambassador to France has "open house" on the Fourth of July for Americans in Paris. Tea is served and only a formal call is made. Although Mrs. Baur and Mrs. Walter Head, her mother, have spent many summers in France, it is the first Fourth of July for Mrs. Baur, as permanent resident.

In the afternoon they will go to the embassy, and in the evening give a small dinner for several Americans, with fireworks later.

Mrs. W. C. Lambert, who is in Paris this summer, is spending her Fourth of July out of America. Her sister, Mrs. Christine Brooks, will spend the national holiday in Vienna. Few national holidays of America have been celebrated by Mrs. Umberto Bellini (Eugene Patterson) within the past few years. Mrs. Bellini, who spent several years in work in Czechoslovakia and in Russia, will spend the Fourth of July in Rome, this year.

Wears Wedding Gown at 25th Anniversary

One hundred and fifty guests called last evening between the hours of 8 and 10 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Blackwell, in honor of their 25th wedding anniversary, which they celebrated yesterday. One of the guests, William Gladly, who had attended their wedding, came from Detroit for the event.

Mrs. Blackwell wore her wedding gown, remodeled, a grey broadcloth trimmed with grey lace and beaded with cut steel. In place of a bouquet she clasped in her hands the ivory fan and val lace handkerchief which she carried to the altar, and which her mother and grandmother had carried when they were wed.

Mr. and Mrs. Blackwell's daughters, Mary and Betty, received with them, and Mesdames R. C. Peters, N. B. Updike, R. E. Updike and W. J. Miller assisted the hostess.

Spring flowers were used in profusion through the house, and a mound of opelia roses lent their soft color to the dining room.

Mr. Blackwell is a pioneer Nebraskan coming to Harvard 33 years ago. Later he brought his bride from her home in Princeton, N. J. Mrs. Blackwell is a vice regent of the Omaha chapter of D. A. R.

Weddings Interest Gabby

One Bride Wears an Ankle Garter; Another Has Trouble Donning Wedding Ring.

NOTHING is quite as sweet as revenge. Nothing quite as hard to maneuver without detection. But Gabby thinks one young person, much in the public eye tasted these forbidden fruits very cunningly at a recent wedding.

Defeated in one of those struggles which strong silent women engage in for the hand of a man, this lady Judas, whom Gabby will call Juda to give it a feminine twist, accomplished her aims in a rather novel fashion.

To spoil the wedding was her aim, and reaching around in the dark caverns of her mind she metaphorically laid fingers on a weapon. No knives in the back, no cloutis wrenched, no vitriol scorch case she but she touched cunningly at last upon—a garter.

An aged thing it was, fitting her vengeful needs, and, it must be confessed, her person (which was stoutish), like a glove. It was faded, soiled and blue, frayed, with a bit of dragged lace about it. A fitting weapon, you'll agree.

A conversation with the bride brought about the offer of the "something borrowed" of nuptial tradition, from Juda.

The bride, a slender thing, accepted though she was somewhat dashed when the dragged garter appeared.

Behold, in plain sight around the bride's ankle.

The bride probably has increased respect for Shakespeare, who said, "neither a borrower nor a lender be."

THIS lovely marquis diamond ring presented by Mr. Millard to Miss Daugherty on their betrothal afforded the groom, what seemed for a time an almost insurmountable obstacle to saying the magic words, "with this ring I thee wed."

The jewel, which is oval shaped and one of the loveliest of its kind was found to be married with a conventional wedding band and so he had ingeniously devised a setting of platinum bands, two of diamond, and a third, middle one sapphires, which would be a solution.

ENTREE to California movie and art circles, Gabby learns, may be obtained through the office of a really clever scenario.

Of course Gabby realizes that this hint will hardly make it easy for any vast number of aspirants to this

Claire Daugherty Weds Willard B. Millard

Bishop McGovern Reads Lines; Bride and Groom to Europe Until Late Fall.

Tulle lent itself graciously to bridal loveliness last evening when Claire, daughter of Mrs. J. M. Daugherty, was united in marriage to Willard B. Millard, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Millard of Denver, formerly of this city, and a nephew of Miss Jessie Millard.

The bride, who has been a queen of Ak-Sar-Ben, was never more regal than when she swept down the broad staircase on the arm of her eldest brother, John C. Daugherty of Greeley, Neb.

Through the hall she trod, preceded by her attendants, to an altar where two tall gold candelabra and two floor vases filled with Ward roses stood against a blue damask curtain in the music room.

Her gown was a Tappe model of white satin, whose side-draped skirt was almost hidden under a swirl of tulle which fell into the same lines, caught with a shower of orange blossoms. The bodice of her gown was made without sleeves and with a Jenny neck.

White orchids formed her bridal bouquet and her veil of tulle, also a Tappe model, fell from an orange blossom bandeau and was completely edged with these flowers. Her white satin opera slippers had rose point buckles.

Miss Daugherty's only jewels were the two matching bracelets, one a solid band of diamonds, and the other a solid band of sapphires, which were the groom's gift.

The bridesmaids, Miss Eleanor Burkley and Miss Catherine Cartan of Sausalito, Cal., wore Callot frocks of peach satin, fashioned with skirts in petals edged with six-inch bands of matching tulle. The bodices featured the round decollete, and the girdles were caught in the front with French flowers.

Miss Emma Nash, cousin of the bride, was her maid of honor. Miss Nash was also gowned in peach nuances, but her frock was a contrast in silhouette to those of Miss Burkley and Miss Cartan, which were made on slender lines, for hers was all of tulle, with a very full skirt, and trimmed with ribbons in ciel blue.

These three attendants carried Ward roses and larkspur, and wore peach-tinted slippers with brilliant buckles.

Bishop Patrick McGovern of Wyoming performed the ceremony at 8:30. Preceding this, Miss Ellen Creighton, cousin of the bride sang, "Oh, Promise Me," and a stringed orchestra played the wedding march.

Joe Millard of Chicago, brother of the groom, served him as best man, and the ushers included Ray Millard of Chicago, brother of the groom; Edward Daugherty, brother of the bride; Denman Kountze, David Caldwell and James Connely.

Afterwards, in the receiving line, Miss Jessie Millard stood with Mrs. Daugherty. Mrs. Daugherty was gowned in orchid chiffon beaded in crystal and wore orchids. Miss Millard wore black lace.

Mr. Millard and his bride have gone to Europe for their honeymoon and will return before Christmas to make their home in Omaha.

At the rehearsal dinner given Friday evening by Mrs. Daugherty the bride gave her cousin, Miss Nash, a gold fringe bracelet, and gave Misses Cartan and Burkley gold miniature cases. Mr. Millard gave his groomsmen traveling clocks in pigskin cases, and to his best man he gave a hand-wrought cigar box. Miss Daugherty gave Mr. Millard a gold and platinum cigar case.

Mr. Head Entertains Over the Fourth.

Messrs. and Mesdames J. E. Davidson, Joseph Barker, George Brandeis, Frank Judson, Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Hull, Mrs. W. A. Fraser and L. F. Crofoot will spend Fourth of July in St. Joseph, Mo., at Wilverell, as the guests of Walter W. Head.

The Prentiss Lords Here.

Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss Lord and sons, John and Lawrence of Brattleboro, Vt., are the guests of Mr. Lord's parents, Dr. and Mrs. J. F. Lord. They are on a motor trip.

Carried From Ship in Baskets Lifted by Derricks

The unusual experience of being carried by basket from a steamer to the coast town where they landed was that of Mr. and Mrs. M. O. Talbot and daughter, Nathalie, who just returned from a four months' trip in South America. Mendoza, in Peru, is a coast town where steamers cannot reach docks, according to Mrs. Talbot.

"We were literally picked up in baskets by derricks and swung over the water on to the landing place at the city," said Mrs. Talbot. "We touched five ports in Peru and went into the land of the Inca Indians."

Starting at Valparaiso, Mr. and Mrs. Talbot and daughter went by train to Santiago.

From Peru, they crossed the Andes mountains on a railroad that is one of the few to cross these high mountains. The road goes through Uspallata Pass, where a white marble cross is erected on the top of a mountain. This cross was placed at the time peace was made between Argentine and Chile.

The travelers proceeded to Mendoza, a city at the foot of the Andes, then to Buenos Aires. They spent 18 days on the ocean voyage up the Atlantic coast. The start on the trip was made at Havana harbor.
