Miss Towle Wed to D. J. Sibbensen

Ceremony Is Performed Before Megath Altar.

It was a peculiarly beautiful and fitting tribute that Miss Marion Towle should be the first bride to be wed before the altar erected to her childhood friend, the late Mary Megath, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Megath, on an altar installed Sunday by Rev. Thomas Casady, who performed the ceremony.

Miss Towle, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Towle, was wed to Drexel Sibbensen, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. Sibbensen. She wore a gown of white chiffon, hanging straight in the front with a tiny belt just below the normal waist line which bound the back and sides. The skirt, cut full in many places, was edged in pearls and crystals, and the blouse was embroidered elaborately in pearls and crystals. Orange blossoms were grouped at one side of the skirt. These wax blooms formed a coronet across her brow which held the veil in place.

The bride veil, the same one her sister, Mrs. Fred Bucholz, had worn at her wedding, was of Devonshire lace, the fairy tracery of the pattern beautifully outlined against the satin court train down which it fell. Lilies of the valley were used as a bridal bouquet, and the bride wore the groom's gift, a diamond and platinum wrist watch.

Mrs. John H. Summers, who took Mrs. Robert Garrett's place, was the first of the bridal attendants to enter. She wore pale green chiffon made with a full skirt, caught tight about the hips, and fitted into a high waist line. In her hair she wore water lilies, and she carried a sheaf of daisies across one arm.

After Mrs. Summers came Mesdames Ed Megath, John Caldwell, Miss Gertrude Stout, maid of honor, and Mrs. Fred Bucholz, matron of honor, all gowned alike, each in a deeper shade of green, the last one almost an emerald.

Miss Stout carried a bouquet of pink roses and daisies, and Mrs. Bucholz, whose gown was a satin black tulle, made on train, carried daisies and deep pink snapdragons, with a pink water lily in her hair.

Clarence Sibbensen served his brother as best man, and the ushers in the order of their appearance were Roger Keeline, Cuthbert Potter, Ralph Dold, Albert Sibbensen and Frederick Bucholz.

Master Frederick Bucholz carried the ring on a satin cushion.

Martin Busch played the wedding march.

The church was decorated in white hydrangea and palms, and afterwards at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Towle, where the reception was held, spring flowers were used throughout the rooms.

At the reception Mrs. Charles Offutt was in charge, assisting her were Mesdames Victor Caldwell, C. A. Goss, A. H. Hipple, G. W. Megath, M. C. Peters, C. L. Meyer, John Loomis, J. M. Harding, Walter Roberts, T. L. Davis, Wynn Megath, Misses Gladys and Daphne Peters, and Betty Bruce.

Mr. Sibbensen and his bride left for the east at midnight, and will sail July 5 on the Belgenland for Europe to be there until fall when they will return to their home Meadow ranch, Center, Colo.

Omaha loses in the bride one of its most prominent daughters. As president of the Junior League for her term ending in May, she completed one of the most successful years since the organization of the league.

Your Problems

By Martha Allen

Dear Miss Allen: Am coming to you for some advice. I have known a young boy about my age. He comes to our house to see my brother. He and I are good friends. Now, Miss Allen, I have only gone with him once. He acted very cool and indifferent when I went with him. Do you think he likes me? I am going away for a time. Would it be proper for me to write to him?

WONDERING.
Do not write to a boy whom you think does not like you. How do you know he would not care to hear from you. If he takes you to the train or shows you some kindness before your departure, you should write to thank him. But do not send a letter to a boy with whom you have gone only once and who was then "cool and indifferent." It isn't fair to embarrass him with letter unless you have some reason to believe he would like to receive it.

Dear Martha Allen: Perhaps you can give me a little advice as to what colored footwear would be correct to wear with an ecru silk and lace dress. Would white be appropriate to wear at a midsummer wedding and for evenings?

BROWN EYES.
Colored footwear has largely gone out of fashion, except in grays and tans. This, however, would permit you to carry out an attractive effect with two-toned brown and tan slippers, which are of the same nuance as your ecru silk.

White slippers would go very nicely with the ecru color. I should think at a midsummer wedding.

The best dressed women are wearing white kid footwear, with summer formal gowns at the clubs, and there are those who contend it is the only appropriate footwear for hot weather, unless one's feet be shod in tinted catkins.

Sibbensen-Towle Gifts Unusual

Beautiful and unusual wedding gifts to Miss Marion Towle and Drexel Sibbensen, whose marriage took place Tuesday evening at All Saints Episcopal church, were given at the bridal dinner Monday evening at the John W. Towle home. The most unusual gifts were large silver trays with filigree work in the center and banded with gold which were presented by Miss Towle to her wedding attendants. Leather bill folders with gold tips were the gifts of the groom to his best man and the ushers.

The gift of Mr. Sibbensen to his bride was a diamond and platinum wrist watch. Miss Towle's gift to Mr. Sibbensen was a large picture of herself in a gold frame and folder. Gift of the bride's parents was a chest of silver of Marie Antoinette pattern, and the Sibbensen presented the young couple with a new touring car and the trip to Europe, sailing on the Belgenland.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

How Madge and Her Strange Companions Ended their Journey.
Harry Underwood's cocksureness, and his ridiculing remarks concerning Robert Savarin, irritated me so that I was incapable of calmly replying to his query as to the disturbing effect his unexpected appearance might have on Lillian. With a pettishness that I did not try to control, I spoke quickly, acridly.

"Really, astonished as you will be at the assertion, I doubt if seeing you will in the least affect Lillian." Mr. Underwood gave a cough which was suspiciously like a chuckle, and there was a tremor in his voice when he replied which spelled repressed mirth to me, and whetted my resentment to a keener edge.

"No," he queried. "You surprise me, indeed. I had imagined that you would have to summon two physicians and three trained nurses, if I should appear suddenly. The relief is tremendous, I assure you."

"Don't be ridiculous," I snapped in a tone worthy of a termagant, I told myself, shamefacedly. "Impossible," Mr. Underwood retorted cheerfully. "You know that always, under all circumstances, the dignity of demeanor that is mine, never alters. I would not be ridiculous, ever, and you cannot guess how you gr-r-ieve me by such an indictment."

Madge Is Puzzled
His good humor was absolutely imperturbable, and the remembrance of past verbal combats told me how useless it was to attempt to stop his rallery. So I took refuge in the only sanctuary afforded me, that of sulky silence and did not speak again until we reached Queensboro Bridge, and then only in reply to a query of my companion's as to the exact address of the apartment.

Mr. Underwood made two or three provocatory little speeches, then evidently giving me up as a bad job, devoted himself strictly to his driving, and spoke to me only when it was necessary for him to ask a direction.

I wondered vaguely if he were piqued, hoped in desultory fashion that he was, although I really cared nothing what his reactions to my churlishness might be. All my faculties were fused upon one problem—how to warn Lillian that he was near her before she should see him. I felt that after his teasing, I could not bear to have Lillian show any signs of perturbation upon his sudden appearance.

But how to manage things, I did not know, and we had turned into the street which held the apartment without my reaching any solution, when Mr. Underwood, with a short little laugh, bent toward me.

"I'll Be Good."
"Is she so mad that she never, never again is going to speak to the great open space where men are men?"

Three short honks, just behind us, cut short the teasing quotation, and with a muttered exclamation, he drew the car to the side of the road, stopped it and jumped out, all with such rapidity of motion that I scarcely knew what had happened.

"Come back here, Madge, quick," he called as he darted to the rear of the car, and started into action by the pre-emptiveness of his words. I lost no time in obeying him.

The girl, Mamie—who must have given no trouble during the journey, else Pete would have sounded the agreed signal before—was twisting her body in an attempt to free herself from Pete's iron grasp of her arm.

Luckily there was nobody near us upon either side of the street, and I guessed that Mamie would not have made the attempt to get away if there had been passers-by. She had no more desire for publicity than we had, but she had the ratlike instinct to flee—anywhere—whenever the opportunity offered.

How Pete had managed to give the signal Harry Underwood had requested, to keep Mamie from jumping, at the same time to steer his car toward the curb was a puzzle to me, but he had accomplished it, though I fancied there was distinct relief in his eyes when Mr. Underwood's sinewy hand closed upon the girl's wrist, and his brilliant black eyes bore down her sulky ones, while he murmured lustily.

"Have you forgotten our little bargain so soon?" She covered away from him, and for the first time I saw fear in her eyes.

"I'll be good," she said meekly. "Yes, I think you will be," he retorted meaningfully. "Get out now, and we'll walk the rest of the way. I'm sure you won't object to so nice
