Your Problems

Martha Allen

Other Man Worries Her.

Dear Martha Allen: After parting from the girl I love for more than a year on account of a quarrel, I met her again. I found that another man has been giving her a great deal of attention lately, so what can I do? I want to beg her forgiveness and go with this girl again as constantly as before. I love her too much to give her up. HENRY.

You surely didn't expect this girl to be waiting for you, did you, Henry? You will have to double the attentions you gave her before the quarrel if you expect to down the rival. A year is a long time to hold a grudge, but perhaps you can win the girl if you try hard enough. She may love you, but you must prove that you are worthy of all her attention before you can expect to get ahead in the race since there are others in the field.

Anxious—At the theater the man has the tickets for he gives them to the usher, then makes way for the woman to pass ahead of him. He can follow the usher if he likes, it is not important. At the seat the man stands aside and lets the woman go first, for he should always sit on the seat nearest the aisle or nearest the aisle.

Do—When two persons are walking together and one stops to speak to some acquaintance, it is a matter of choice whether the second person stops also. The person who stops may only want to exchange a few words. But usually if two persons are walking together the stop is made and introductions follow.

Susan—It is against custom for a woman to wear white at her second marriage. The bride need not confine herself to traveling dress; any other dress would be appropriate.

T—In introductions the young person is introduced to the elder, a man to a woman.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

What Lillian Asked Madge to Discover About Underwood.

At my low "Come in," Lillian opened the door wide enough to enable me to see the girl Mamie with her head bowed upon the chair back and her shoulders shaking convulsively. I waited until she had crossed the door again before speaking, but she forestalled the question on my lips by a little admiring ejaculation.

"You are the prettiest thing, Madge!" she said. "And please don't accuse me of redundancy. I know I've said the same thing many times before, but your ability to 'know 'em cold' with an ordinary gown, and less than half an hour's time to the prim, always has been a revelation to me."

I flushed with pleasure, for I knew that Lillian's words are always sincere, utterly foreign to the sheathed claw compliments so many women hand each other.

"Thank you," I said gratefully. "But tell me what you have done to our troublesome friend. All the turbulence appears to have been taken out of it. Isn't she weeping?"

"Quarts," Lillian answered with a little laugh that was grim. "Indeed, I'm afraid your landlady may have to have that chair upholstered, if she will affect the covering. But it wasn't I who reduced her to order."

"Who then?" I queried, although I guessed the answer.

"Her aunt, Mrs. Marks," Lillian gave a reminiscent little smile. "When our redoubtable neighbor found out that Mamie had been responsible for your carrying-off that gang of bootleggers I had to restrain her from damaging the younger woman's beauty. Balked of her desire to administer physical chastisement, Mrs. Petey began to exercise her vocal power. Judging that Mamie needed exactly what she was getting, I didn't interfere except to keep the lady's voice down."

"An achievement which deserves the Croix de Guerre in itself," I laughed.

"Even the congressional medal," she smiled. "But although she was obliged to whisper, your neighbor's vocabulary was picturesque, blistering and most effective. Mamie has been reduced to a heap of clay."

"But enough of Mamie," she said with an expressive gesture that relegated the girl to the status of a piece of furniture. "If I can keep her here for a day or two, I'll have all the threads in my hands. What do you think? Will she be able to get back to Bridgehampton by herself if I put her on the train? I don't want you to have to wait around for her if you're anxious to get back to Junior tomorrow morning."

I permitted myself a mental chuckle, the only comment I dared to make on Lillian's transparent desire to get me away from the apartment as soon as possible so she could carry on her investigation of the Marks family undisturbed.

"She has been on trains before," I answered, "and there will be no reason for her to leave it, especially—"

"If she is properly disciplined be-

WHO ELSE WANTS BETTER BREAD?

Give your baking skill a chance

THE kitchen is fragrant with ravishing odors. On the table are big hot loaves of crusty brown bread. In the oven is a light, fluffy cake enriching the air with the flavor of hot spices and crust. On the window-sill is a fat, juicy pie, its flaky crust all ready to melt in one's mouth. And mother, busy putting things to right, has a happy flush on her face.

Turning to her son's wife she says—"I've been baking for thirty years, but I've never found any flour before that seemed to give me such a sense of sureness as Omar Wonder Flour."

Two things distinguish Omar Flour—quality and uniformity. Omar is a perfected flour of selected spring and winter wheat. By the most exacting tests known in flour milling Omar is maintained at an absolute quality standard. By actual bakings in our own kitchen every run of the mill is required to meet that standard before a sack is shipped.

Go to your grocer to-day and buy a sack of Omar Wonder Flour. Use it in all your baking, bread, biscuits, doughnuts, waffles, pies, cakes. You'll be rewarded with results rich in satisfaction.
