A QUESTION ABOUT Brown's Iron

Bitters ANSWERED.

The question has probably been asked thousand:
of times, "How can Brown's Iron Bitters cure everything?" Well, it doesn't, But it does cure any disease for which a reputable physician would prescribe IRON Physicians recognize Iron as the best restorative agent known to the profession, and inquiry of any leading chemical firm will substantiate the assertion that there are more preparations of iron than of any other substance used in medicine This shows conclusively that iron is acknowledged to be the most important factor in successful medical practice. It is, however, a remarkable fact, that prior to the discovcut of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS no perfectly satisfactory iron combination had ever been found.

DROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not injure BROWN'S IRON BITTERS the teeth, cause

The muscles then become firmer, the digestion improves, the bowels are active. In women the effect is usually more rapid and marked. The eyes begin at once to brighten; the skin clears up; healthy color comes to the cheeks; nervousness disappears; functional derangements become regular, and if a nursing mother, abundant sustenance is supplied for the child. Stock Water On High Prairies.

Mr. G. A. Nitchy writes for the quarterly report of the Kansas state board of agriculture:

The highest portions of central and western Kansas, those forming the "divides" or "backbones" between the Arkansas river and the Smokey Hill, between the Smoky Hill and the Saline and the Solomon, are invariably the smoothest and best agricultural lands. Still, they are to a great extent yet vacant; notwithstanding their deep, fertle loam, their smooth, and frequently quite level surface, their splendid dense turf of natural grasses, settlers have been rather slow to occupy them. The cause for this backwardness is apparent at the first acquaintance with these beautiful prairies. It is the lack of running water. While the broken and frequently rough lands along the rivers and their numerous small tributary creeks are nearly all taken up, with all their stony and gravelly slopes. their steep bluffs, deep ravines, gulches, and canyons, comparatively few have ventured to settle on the high, smooth "divides" in such beautiful counties as Barton, Russel, Osborne, Ellis, Rush, and others. The settlers in all these counties find that their prosperity must be based on raising and feeding stock; their agriculture must be auxiliary to their stock interests. They can raise winter grains for winter pasturage, sorghum, millet, and corn for fattening, and in such husbandry they find a sure profit; raising wheat for the market does not pay. But all stock needs a regular and abundant supply of good water. Nature has not provided that, lavish as she has been in other respects, to the high prairies. Common wells have often been sunk to great depths without finding the coveted water. I know of a well in Barton county 250 feet deep, and the water scarcely fit for use; my horses rather went without.

surface. Some intelligent farmers near Verbeck postoffice, in Barton county, tried same years ago to utilize the rainwater by storing it in large underground cisterns. At least there I have come across such cisterns for the first time, though afterward I found a very good | ing my store. I take great pleasure in reone also in Osborne county. The commending it to others." utility of such cisterns, their cheapness as compared with drilled wells, and the certainty of having plenty of good water, recommend their general adoption on all of our high ridge prairies. In these central counties, say between ranges six and twenty-five west (that is, between the west lines of the counties of McPherson, Saline, Ottawa, Cloud, and Republic. and the one hundredth meridian, which runs though the counties of Norton, Graham, Trego, Ness, etc.), the average annual rainfall has in the last twenty years amounted to about 20 inches (accurate-

of Russell bored a well for artesian water, and abandoned it at a depth of 977 feet, without having the water come nearer than 235 feet from the ly stated, to 23.61 inches). One acre may therefore be counted upon to receive an annual amount of rain-water standing 20 inches deep on every one of 'the 43,560 square feet of its surface. This is, then, equivalent to 72,600 cubic feet, or upward of 17,-240 barrels. If we would lead it all into an underground eistern, built cylindrical-or circular at top and bottom-and 20 feet in diameter, or across, we must dig it nearly 230 feet deep.

This, then, is the problem, and the solution will suggest itself. Even the smoothest level quarter section has some slight depression, often a shallow draw several acres in extent. If we build across its lower end a dam of stone, soil, add sod, with a stone face on its outside for the overflow to prevent washing and breaking, we will have a pond into which probably more than an acre of rainfall will collect. Near the edge of the pond, about twenty feet from it and somewhat above the dam, we now build our capacious cistern, or a system of connected cisterns. They will in many places require to be walled up with stone and mortar, and upon this wall the hydraulic cement is put. They are best covered with a well built arch, though timber platforms may do for a number of years. Lastly, the pond and cistern are to be connected by a trench starting at the bottom of the pond and running almost level to the cistern. This is the filter, and is therefore filled with gravel, coarse and fine sand, and its inlet into the cistern built with loose brick. The slower the water filters through this trench, the cleaner and purer it will reach the cistern. Every farmer will, of course, adapt the details of the plan to his needs and circumstances. Some will use a windmill, pipes, and troughs, and have it led into the house and barn; others will use a common chain pump and hand power. I know of one cistern in Barton county that has supplied all the water for the household and more than a hundred head of cattle and horses.

More Investigation Needed.

There is a story told of a gentleman who did not believe in the theory or practice that "cleanliness is next to Godliness," and being a man of principle, he only bathed at long intervals. On one of these occasions, however, he was so thorough and energetic with a scrubbing brush that he discovered on his person a pair of drawers that he had been missing over a year. This should encourage the legislative investigating committee that is after Mr. Sharp to keep on. There is no telling what they may discover, if they persevere with their sanitary measures .-Texas Siftings.
