FOR UNION MEN

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

Most Important Meeting of the Year
Scheduled for Tomorrow.

The most important meeting of the year for Lincoln Typographical Union No. 209 is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon, 2:30 at Fraternity hall. On this occasion candidates to fill the offices of the union for the ensuing twelve months will be nominated. The proposition of levying an assessment to send a delegate to Boston will come up for final decision. Plans for the proper observance of "Memorial Sunday" will be presented for acceptance or rejection. And in addition arrangements are to be made for the regular election to be held three weeks later.

Heretofore the approach of an election has been the cause of a lot of union politics, but for some cause or other there seems to be little or no interest this year. There are no announced candidates for any of the offices save that of delegate, notwithstanding the fact that the officers elected this month will be entrusted with the delicate task of making a new contract to take the place of the present one which expires in February of next year.

John Marshall has disposed of his residence property and on Thursday departed with his family for Colorado Springs. Mr. Marshall is going to look for a location where he can engage in the publication of a "country weekly," hoping thus to preserve his eyesight which has become badly affected by too close application to a "Merg" keyboard. Wherever he decides to locate he and his good wife will have with them the best wishes of a host of friends.

W. C. Norton has assumed the foremanship of the Western Newspaper Union shop. Roy Kennedy assumes the foremanship of the Daily Nebraskan, vice, Norton, promoted.

Henry Bigaman succumbed to a bad cold and went into the home shop a couple of days last week, pending repairs.

"Gene Lyman is again able to "hang the elevator," although he still wears his occiput in a sling.

THE PRESSMEN.

Annual Convention is Slated to Meet
At Mobile, June 13.

The annual convention of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union will be held this year in Mobile, Ala., convening June 13th. Great interest attaches to the work this convention is likely to do, the most important matter, of course, being the eight-hour campaign, which under the able leadership of President George L. Berry, has been quite successful. The Lincoln local will not be represented this year, the boys feeling unable, in view of recent heavy expenses, to put up the money necessary to send a delegate.

Omaha will be represented at the Mobile convention by William H. Miller of the Bee press room.

Judge McGee, in his decision handed down in the City Court of Louisville, Ky., on April 13, clearly defines the rights of the union men and the defendants, Charles Davidson, John Ditch, J. Steurle and August Hanke, striking pressmen formerly employed by the Globe Printing Company charged with disorderly conduct, were dismissed. The union men were upheld in their actions in connection with the strike. James and John Kinnary, who conduct a private detective agency, were fined $50 each and required to give bond in the sum of $1,000 each to keep the peace.

Walter Brown's new apartment house on F street is now enclosed and work has been commenced on the interior finish.

Alex Weckesser, the pressman who represents his craft on the Labor Temple directory, declares that while the local has not taken action as a body, every member has individually subscribed for a block of Temple stock. That sounds good.

THE BARBERS.

Grand Forks, (N. D.) barbers are on strike to enforce the Sunday closing rule. North Dakota has a state law against Sunday shops, but the law has not been observed in Grand Forks or East Grand Forks. The journeymen asked the bosses to observe the law, and when the bosses refused the journeymen went on strike. The barbers have enlisted the aid of the county attorney, and every boss barber who violates the statutes will be given a chance to defend himself in district court.

PAINTERS AND DECORATORS.

Charles March, second vice-president of the International Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, died suddenly on April 18 of heart failure in Montreal, Canada, his home city. Mr. March had been ill for some time in a hospital, and it was thought that his recovery was complete. Mr. March was well and favorably known throughout the United States and Canada, was an excellent worker in the cause, and his death is regretted by all trades unions.

SPORTING FACTS AND FANCIES

Famous 20 years ago only as a National league baseball pitcher, John K. Tener, millionaire banker of Charleroi, Pa., and grand exalted ruler of the Elks of North America, will go to the next session of congress and sit in the seat that for 14 years has been occupied by Emmet F. Acheson, as representative of the Twenty-fourth district. Tener was recently nominated by the Republicans by an overwhelming majority, to the surprise of everybody but himself, and in that district a nomination is as good as an election. In the late '80s Tener was a pitcher for the Pittsburg and Chicago baseball teams in turn, and when A. G. Spalding took the All-American team on a trip around the world he took Tener along as one of the pitchers. Soon after the start was made, Spalding discovered that Tener had financial ability, and he made him the treasurer of the outfit. During the time they were gone they visited 25 different countries, and the money had to be changed almost as many times. Tener paid for everything, and when the team returned to the United States and his accounts were audited, it was found that there was an overplus of exactly seven cents. Spalding was so pleased that he offered Tener a position with his New York concern, but Tener was busy forming the ill-fated Brotherhood, and when it collapsed he gave up the game and went to Charleroi and made a fortune in real estate and banking there.

Detroit will always have a cherished spot in Charley O'Leary's heart. Not only did he gain baseball distinction through his connection with the American league champions of 1907, but he made his first out-of-town performance as a major league player in Detroit. In telling of his early big league experiences, O'Leary said: "I was a member of the Chicago White Sox in 1909, and the first out-of-town game for me in the big league society was in Detroit. It was a Sunday game, and Burns and Stallings owned the Tigers at that time. We played at West End park, and had a stormy session of it. I filled in at short. O'Leary was turned back to the minors later, but having once tasted the sweet dregs of the majors, he made up his mind to work diligently until his playing won recognition again. A few years later Detroit picked up the hustling shortstop, and he has made good with vengeance ever since. O'Leary is one of the most popular players in the profession. He takes excellent care of himself and is a tireless worker.

If you want to be a ball player, and stick to the game longer than your fellows, be a catcher. If you want to remain in the game year after year, and never seem to grow old, practice with the mask and big mitt. The catching end of baseball is usually looked upon as the hardest department of the game, and yet a catcher can last longer than a player of any other position. Size up the old men of the league and you'll find that most of them are catchers. There is but one Cy Young. Of course there are exceptions in other places, fellows like Kid Gleason and Jake Beckley, who seem to go on forever, but age usually affects the catcher less than it does any other player. Jim McGuire has caught ball more than a quarter of a century now, and he is still able to do duty. Malachi Kittridge has lasted for 20 years. Down in Washington old Jack Warner can still go some. Jack O'Connor was a star in the old Cleveland days, and he is still on deck in St. Louis. Exactly Bill Sullivan and Lou Criger are not aged, but they are not spring chickens, and they are classed as the two best men in the league. The first sign of age in the ball player is a slackening of speed. This shows less in the catcher than any one else because speed is not required so much there. While the catcher's brain must be always alert and his arm good, he does not have to use his legs very much.

Brad Robinson, the young St. Louis collegian who will be tried out by the Brewers, will not report until June. Robinson graduates from St. Louis university late in May, and does not want to quit before taking his degree.
