MANAGER PHILADELPHIA "ATHLETICS"

Cornelius McGillicuddy, better known as Connie Mack, has been manager of the Philadelphia American League team since the organization of the league. He is regarded as one of the best judges of ball players in the business, and his team is always a dangerous contender in the pennant race.

WAGNER IS BETTER OFF FOR CHANGING HIS MIND

Baseball History Fails to Show Where Player Ever Showed Old-Time Form After Season Off.

If Hans Wagner, the great Pittsburgh shortstop, intended to lay off a year from big league baseball, as he said all winter and during the spring, his change of mind was a good thing as far as he is concerned. The history of baseball fails to show a single big league player who ever quit for one season and returned in his old-time form the next spring.

Working in a lumber yard at Vincennes, Ind., for $1.50 a day, diving for pearls in the Moon river on Sundays is a big man who probably would have been worth $50,000 to-day had he not become bull-headed and refused to accept a club's terms. His name is Amos Rusie, and not so many years ago he was known from coast to coast as the greatest pitcher the game ever produced.

Just a few miles below the place where Rusie is located there works another big man named Jouett Meakin. Meakin was Rusie's partner in the great wind-up of the New York Giants in 1894. Meakin is now working in a machine shop and playing ball on Sundays for two dollars a game.

Fourteen years ago, when these men were in their prime, Meakin drew $4,000 for a season's work and Rusie drew $4,500. They asked for more. Meakin was on the decline and the club refused to raise his salary. He remained out of the game for half a season and returned, but failed to show his old-time form and drifted to the minors.

Rusie held out. All New York howled against the club refusing to raise his pay. Rusie was out of the game two seasons. He then returned. New York sent him to Cincinnati and he failed to show and the once great pitcher drifted back. The season's retirement had ruined him as a pitcher.

John M. Ward, who quit the Giants when at his best, is another example. Would the case of Hans Wagner have been any different from the cases of the army of players who have failed to show after retiring for a season or so?

MAJOR LEAGUE NOTES

Somehow that Boston team of "baseball champions," as they were heralded, seems to move right along.

Between Hal Chase and Tenney New York ought to experience some first base thrills this summer.

Have you noticed how well all the new pitchers in the two leagues are working? Can they keep it up?

Veteran players of the St. Louis Browns prophesy that Graham, the southpaw pitcher secured from Shreveport, last year, will be among the leading pitchers at the end of the season.

Detroit is having a hard time keeping out of last place, but keep your eyes on them; they will be in the running in a short time.

During the series with the Reds Wagner played baseball that did not even come up to the ordinary. Compared with the standard set by himself last season, his play, both in the field and at bat, was poor.

MANY COLLEGE PLAYERS IN THE MAJOR LEAGUES

Several Diamond Stars Learned Game While Students—Some of the More Prominent Ones.

University ball players seem to be all the rage now-a-days. The University of Wisconsin has furnished four majors so far now: Frank Dillon, former first baseman of Brooklyn; Berthold, former pitcher for Cleveland; Charlie Chech, pitcher for Cincinnati, and Cy Young III, pitcher for Pittsburgh.

The University of Illinois also furnished four men who are playing major league ball at present: Lundgren is at present with the Cubs; Pfeiffer is with the Boston Nationals, and formerly was pitcher for the Cubs; Beebe is at present pitcher for the St. Louis Nationals, and was also a member of the Cubs; Jake Stahl, former captain, manager and first baseman for Washington, and present outfielder for New York Americans, is also an Illinois graduate.

Beloit college, Wisconsin, has three alumni ball players: Frank Sparks, pitcher for the Phillies and New York and Milwaukee Americans; Clarence Beaumont, outfielder for the Boston and Pittsburgh National teams, and Merle Adkins, pitcher for Boston, are all Beloit graduates.

Lynch and Tife, both majors last year, come from Brown university. Doc White and Devlin both are Georgetown university graduates. Adie Joss and Jack Kleinow both are Sacred Heart college alumni. Christy Mathewson is a Bucknell man, Eddie Collins is from Columbia, Glaze is from Dartmouth, Chase is from Santa Clara, Clarkson from Harvard, Owen from Lansing Agricultural college, Ed Reulbach from Notre Dame, Thomas Walsh, the Cub catcher, St. Mary's college of Kansas, Chance from Washington university, Storke from Amherst, Plank from Gettysburg, Charlie Brown from Agricultural college in Ames, Ia.; Roy Thomas from Pennsylvania, Waddell from Volant college, Wilhelm from Wooster, Smoot from Washington college, Jim Collins from St. Joseph's college, and Simon Nichols from Maryland State university.

MINOR LEAGUE ITEMS

Tim Flood, manager of the St. Paul team, gets a bonus for finishing high in the race. He gets a certain amount if he finishes in the first division, and the higher he goes the larger the sum.

Arthur Chalmers, the famous Lafayette fullback, has signed to play right field for the Easton team of the Atlantic league. Chalmers had been elected captain of the Lafayette eleven, but gave up his college career to play ball.

Arthur Chalmers, the famous Lafayette owner of the Columbus club, intends to use his Lima franchise for a farm for Columbus players. With that end in view he has ordered Frank Jude, the Indian player, shipped there. Jude says, however, he will not submit, but will quit first.

Turned Out of Service.

Terry Turner, the Cleveland shortstop, has thrown his arm out of shape and is expected to be out of the game for some time.
